Main industrial nations close to currency pact

BY STEWART FLEMING IN WASHINGTON, PETER BRUCE IN IN BONN AND JANET BUSH IN LONDON

yesterday appeared to be moving on Thursday and takes effect towards a temporary agreement from Monday, to lower the distory to limit fluctuations in count rate to 2.5 per cent was the exchange rates of key currencies.

Finance ministers and central bankers from the seven leading industrial countries were converging on Paris for a weekend of intensive talks about steps to improve the outlook for the world economy. In the background are deepening concerns about growth prospects in West Germany and Japan, fears about protectionist trends in Washington and a sense that, with currency markets nervous about the dollar, the industrial nations need to put recent bickering about their economic policies behind them.

The Group of Five, comprising the US, West Germany, Japan, Britain and France, will prob-ably meet today. They will be joined tomorrow by Italy and Canada for a Group of Seven meeting.

The threat of renewed tensions over Third World debt is another factor which will be preying on the minds of officials. On both sides of the Atlantic yesterday officials using broadly similar language were hinting that outlines of a limited agree-ment had been hammered out. A formal decision to establish permanent "target" or "reference zones" for the major currencies does not appear to be on the cards, but a temporary understanding about what are the acceptable ranges of fluctuation between the yen, the dollar and the Mark similar to that arrived at last autumn between the US and Japan seems likely.

It is recognised that if some,

New high on stock market perhaps temporary, stability in exchange rates is to be achieved the issue of official intervention in the currency markets will have to be addressed. What appears to be missing, however, are firm commitments to agreed changes in underlying economic policies which would improve prospects for longer term currency stability.

Domestic political considerations in West Germany, Japan and the US in particular are not conducive to such a bold step, although some officials are speculating about the possibility of another cut in the Japanese discount rate soon. "Look for some commitment by Japan. It has to be less than concrete (for political reasons), but look for language indicating the way Japan will move," said one official yesterday.

Mr Satoshi Sumita, Governor of the Bank of Japan, said in Tokyo yesterday that the paramount consideration in Japan's LEADING industrial countries decision, which became known a desire to stabilise the yen. He also hoped the move would help boost Japan's sagging economy.

> to signal Japan's political will for an agreement at this weekthe rate cut showed Japan's desire for international cooperation to stabilise exchange rates and work towards sus-tained economic growth world-

Confirming the line taken by other officials, he said he did not think any firm proposal on "reference ranges" would be included in any agreement.

West Germany has until now firmly rejected US proposals for such zones.

But a senior government official said yesterday that Bonn was prepared, in Paris, to "pragmatically examine whether, in the current situation, it would be useful for the time being to co-operate more strongly towards influencing the exchange rate."

"The German position that, as before, we have doubts about a permanent system of target zones," he said, emphasising the word "permanent." The senior official said that intensive talks had been continuing at official and minis-terial level among the G5 countries since December. Where judgments about the implications of the dollar's fall were once far apart, he said, the Americans, the Europeans and the Japanese now had more in common than a few months ago."

In that time, the dollar has fallen further against the D-mark and the Germans believe the US does not want it to fall more because it could cause further inflation.

The official would not say what West Germany, whose exporters have been hurt by the strength of the D-Mark, would have to offer in Paris in the face of US demands that it do something to boost economic

It is thought unlikely that Mr Gerhard Stoltenberg, the West German finance minister, will be able to make any firm promises. A DM 9bn (£3.2bn) tax cut next year would be brought forward, but only to the great political embarrassment of the Government, which faces two important state elections between now and the

A RALLY of more than 100,000 Sikis in the troubled northern Indian state of Pun-jab yesterday pledged sup-port for Mr Surjit Singh Barnala, the state's moderate chief minister, and rejected the call of high priests based in the sacred city of Amritsar for him to resign, John Elliot reports from New Delhi.

The size of the crowd, from all parts of India, gave a significant hoost to Mr Barnala, who is supported by Mr Rajiv Gandhi, India's Prime Minister, in his struggle to stay in power.

Sikh leaders attending the rally included Mr Balwant Singh, Punjab's Finance Minister, and 18 others who pledged their loyalty for religious purposes to the high priests on Thursday.

This dual loyalty underlines the fragility of Mr Barnala's regime in the battle for power which has focused public attention on the Sikh's traditional merging of politi-tics and religion.

AUSTRALIA yesterday

The plans, which clearly imply an expanded Australian security role in the region, were disclosed to Parliament by Mr Kim Beazley, Defence Minister. They follow a major review of Australia's defence policy and military capabilities.

They coincide with growing concern over possible super-power rivalry in the Pacific, worries over suspension of the Anzus alliance and unhappiness at French policy on nuclear testing and towards New Caledonia.

Speaking before publication of the Government's white paper on defence, due next month. Mr Beazley said Australia intended to give Pacific Island states " the same priority as we give to our much older and more substantial defence relations established with the nations of South-East Asia over four decades."

Without mentioning explicitly the Soviet Union and its activities in the Pacific, he said: "An untriendly maritime power in the area could inhibit our freedom of movement through these approaches and place in doubt the security of allel. Tory MP may have to apologise to Speaker

By Tom Lynch

A CONSERVATIVE MF may have to apploprize to Mr Bernard Weatherill, Speaker of the Commons, on Monday after appearing to question his imnartiality in the current round of bitter personal attacks between Tory and Labour leaders. Mr Richard Hickmet. MP for Glanford and Scunthorne, issued a statement resterday complaining that Mr Weathernil has not lifted a finger" to stop Lahour attacks on the Prime Minister's character, in-style of government. Earlier this week. Mr Weatherill ruled that motions signed by Tory backbenchers attacking Mr Neil Kinnock, Leader of the Opposition, as unfit to govern were irregular and not a proper subject for debate. Mr Hickmet who was not in the House said vesterday: "What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander and we look to the Speaker to be even-handed

Mr Alan Williams, a Labour spokesman on Commons affairs, complained that Mr Hickmet had made "a serious and possibly unprecedented allegation outside the House. What action can the House take to protect the chair from such verbal thiggery by junior and petu-

Mr Peter Shore, shadow
Leader of the House, demanded a statement and apology from Mr Hickmet. Mr David Waddington, Home

Office Minister of State, who was also in the chamber, quickly distanced the Government from Mr Hickmet's statement, "If the reports are in any way correct then the Government would deplore them," he said. He urned Mr Hickmet to seek an appointment with the Speaker to explain what he had said.

Mr Williams said in a state ment later that Mr Wadding ton's response was "very telling. The minister came straight to the despatch box. straight to the despatch box, shot his colleague and announced that he would ask questions afterwards. The body was left on the floor of the House."

IF ANYBODY can feel reasonably satisfied at the end of a political week of feverish mud-slinging and self-inflicted gaffes it is the SDP-Liberal Alliance. Not only does the SDP candidate appear to be closing the gap on Labour in next Thursday's Greenwich by-election, but the Alliance's national rating is clearly picking up. The message of the polls has recently seemed confused. partly because of fluctuations in a couple of surveys, notably Gallup. But taking an average of all the main national surveys indicates the underlying trend. On this basis the Alliance's rating in February averages 23.4 per cent. This compares with 20.5 per cent last month and a range of 19 to 21 per cent in the final quarter of 1986. What Dr David Owen, the SDP leader, has described as a "kick-up" probably reflects the impact of the Alliance's big publicity drive and rally towards the end

Even after this pick-up the Alliance's rating is still below the level of last summer, before its open split on nuclear defence policy, and below the percentage of votes achieved in the 1983 General Election.

The fluctuations in Alliance support are naturally of crucial importance for the other two Privately many Labour leaders consider that an outright majority cannot be achieved. While forming a minority Government is still possible in theory, the main realistic objective is to deny the Tories an overall majority.

This in turn depends on suc-cess by the Alliance, given Labour's apparent inability to break through the 40 per cent barrier in the polls.

The Tories' rating has slipped lightly in the past month to parties. In the past there has mainly been a not shift between just over 38 per cent from 39 per cent in January and the Tories and the Alliance. about 40 per cent at the end tthough with obviously con-siderable cross-movement beof 1986. A Mori survey for The Times this week indicated that Labour advance since 1983 had been concentrated in its safesi territory and in its most hopeless. An uncertainty is whether these differences would hold up during the course of an election campaign, when the intense competition and activity usually seen in a marginal sear could help Labour.

Even if. as the hookies' odds suggest, the Torics are well placed to win a third term, the present poll findings do not guarantce outright victory. The gap between the two main parties is still too narrow for Mrs Thatcher to feel absolutely confident about calling an election on May 7.

But the political mond now But the political mond now is volatile, and a self-fulfilling momentum could develop after the Greenwich by-election, where a Labour loss or even a parrow win would be far worse for Labour morale and standing than a Tory third place; the Budget on March 17; and Mrs Thatcher's Moscow trip and Mrs Thatcher's Moscow trip at the end of next month.

Carriers of illegal immigrants may be fined

By Michael Donne, Aerospace Correspondent

THE GOVERNMENT WAS urgently" considering taking powers to impose financial penalties on airlines and other carriers which bring people into the UK without the nacesary travel documentation. Mr Douglas Hurd. Home Secretary. said last night.

The Home Office said such powers and penalties need to be retrospective:" details are available about when they would be introduced, or the scope of the penalties, but they are likely to be extensive, in an attempt to stamp out the tide of illegal immigration into the UK.

The airlines are already legally required in check passengers' travel documents from countries where visas for the UK are required.

Moreover, if they carry passengers who are subsequently deported, they must bear the cost of deportation, as well as the UK accommodation costs.

The airlines, believe they are already as tough as possible, and argue their check-in staff and other locally-based officials are not trained to detect travel document forgeries.

But the Government clearly feels the illegal immigrant situation is getting out of cortrol. The problem has reached the proportion of several hundred illegal immigrants every month, especially from such countries as Sri Lanka and other south-east Asian terri tories.

While tougher conditions on the issue of visas and passports can help, the Government (ar's the airlines and other carriers should get tougher in the r and pre-boarding check-in scrutinies.

The only way to ensure this is to impose a penalty on car-riers who fail to detect illegal travellers.

The UK is following the example of other countries, such as West Germany and Canada, who have faced similar problems dealing with people arriving without proper documentation. Those countries already have powers to impose financial pentition alties on carriers, which are frequently implemented.

But the airlines are bound to protest that the only way to detect would-be illegal travellers is through an extensive pro-gramme of training of locally-

Due to heavy passenger traffic from the countries involved, it believed that passenge handling delays could arise unless methods are devised to cope with the necessary additional screening. A pressing question is who would pay for such additional measures.

The Home Office steps will affect airlines and carriers of all nationalities serving the UK. British Airways, the biggest carrier between the UK, the Middle and Far East and South East Asia, would be likely to be severely affected. Last night, BA was consider-shiprepairer to shed 152 jobs By Lynton McLain

MORE THAN 150 jobs are to go t Vosper Shipreparers' yard at Southampton, according to Price Waterhouse, the accountancy firm called in on Wednesday to administer the company,

Mr Mark Homan, Price Waterhouse director of insolvency services, had said on Wednesday there was little chance of keeping Vosper Shiprepairers in business, because of mounting debts and a lack of orders.

The appointment of administrators for companies in difficulty was made possible under the 1986 Insolvency Act, with the aim of attempting to increase the opportunities for maintaining them as going con-

Mr Homan said the redundancies at Vosper Shiprepairers were designed to put the company on a "low cost basis while I seck a buyer for the assets."

He said the 152 redundancies would leave Vosper Shiprepairers with a "full operating capability with the core team of 54 key employees remaining with the company." Such staff included senior management. technical personnel and skilled tradesmen. They would enable the company to take on any ship repair work that may be forthcoming.

At the moment the company had "very, very little work." Mr Homan said. He had received a number of initial inquiries about the company.

Mr John Simons, regional chairman of the Confederation of Shipbuilding and Engineering Unions, said the idea of a workers' co-operative was being explored to keep the yard open.

The Gov-ernment released late on Wed-nesday, in haste and as un-in fact, the study appears to corrected proofs, a lengthy statistical study which has led to some disconcertingly contradictory newspaper reports.

At the beart of the matter is the question of "clusters," a term statisticians use for anomalous events such as an unexpectedly high—or low—number of cases of a disease in

As a result of a television programme in 1983 alleging that there was a cluster of leukaemia cases in children living near British Nuclear Fuels' Sellafield plant in Cumbria, the term cluster has been widely adopted as indicating an excess of cancers over the average expected.

Public anxiety about some well-publicised clusters obliged the National Radiological Protection Board, the government watchdog on radiation, to propose a large-scale study by medical scientists at Oxford, using national mortality data from the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys in London. This later became a joint study between the scientists

Beggars and neighbours

"beggar my neighbour"—a game we all play. In the US it is beggar thy neighbour," which sounds more like an accusation; and certainly the Reagan Administration sounds in a rather actions. Those in charge of a accusatory mood as it prepares strong currency will borrow the Paris this weekend.

It accuses the surplus countries of living off other peoples' borrowing, the European Community of offences against US farmers, and the Japanese of consistent, though covert, protectionism.

It does not sound like the agenda for a good humoured gathering, and that is one reason why the currency markets have treated the announcement with such evident suspicion. Analytic opinion is divided between who point out that finance ministers would never a substantive agreement were already complete, and those who think that the underlying and the Fed will be less differences are so sharp that any agreement is likely to prove a hollow sham. consent to attend such a meet-

It is certainly true that a great deal of spadework has been done in the past few weeks. The French, who are somewhat on the sidelines in the economic and monetary arguments (as is Britain) seem to have taken the diplomatic initiative, and have made it clear throughout that they were not going to play host to a futile meeting.

What is more important, the French are the ideal people for the job, or rather they have the ideal man. Mr Jacques de la Rosiere, who achieved world fame as managing director of International Monetary Fund, has recently taken over as governor of the Bank of France. Nobody in the world knows more about the problems of debt and exchange rates, or is listened to with more respect.

Interest rates

It will be worse than disappointing, then, if the meeting produces no more than wishful thoughts about exchange rate stability, and a promise of official money to back them up for a time. Official intervention does, it is true, help to finance deficits; after all, the transactions have the effect of providing US consumers with the British Government to approve foreign currency to go on buy- a sale of Leyland which will ing the BMWs and Japanese cameras they like because central banks volunteer to buy the US bonds which investors are no longer willing to take up in adequate quantities. This roundabout way of giving goods away to keep the factories working is still very much in vogue; the West Gerhave bought some $20bn of unwanted dollars in the last few weeks. This does not, however, stabilise the currency markets sleep.

IN ENGLAND we call it for more than a few days, for two reasons.

One is largely technical. Central banks have a long-standing habit of "sterilising" the effect of the currency market transmoney they need to buy a weak one, so that their money supply remains unaffected; those struggling with the problems of a weak one will feed the money which speculators have sold to other central banks back into their domestic money markets to prevent a shortage which might drive up interest rates.

These manoeuvres unfortu-nately have the effect of off-setting the effect of their original interventions.

One test of the Paris agreement, then, will be some sign that in future market interventions will not be sterilised in this way, so that the West that monetary policy alone can produce the very large changes required to bring current accounts closer to balance.

Supply capacity

Mr James Baker, US Treasury Secretary, has long been urging fiscal action to produce the changes. He was a lone voice a year ago, but has some influential aliles now.

For that reason Paris could well produce at least the announce-ment of talks about talks on the really contentious subjectthe surrender of some domestic sovereignty on economic policy in the cause of neighbourliness. The time is getting short for such a move, because although domestic pressures are driving governments to co-operate on policy, trade issues are driving apart. Mr Jean-Claude director-general of the OECD had some stinging words this week for the makers of farm policies everywhere. This specialised protectionism, he said, was becoming so outrageous that it could spark off a general trade war just as the new trade-liberalising round of talks at the Gatt in Geneva was assembling.

All these strains — just like the strains which drove the cost more than 2,000 jobs in a hard-pressed area - have a common cause: world growth since the 1981 recession has been smooth and sustained, but it has never begun to catch up with the world's supply capacity. In that sense we are all beg-garing our neighbours, and ourselves. If Paris produces even man and Japanese central banks a step towards recognising and solving this problem it will be a triumph, even if it does not put the currency dealers to

TO COULD be just the. appointment to restore Eurotunnel's hopes. Or it could end in tears.

The choice of Alastair Morton to head the f4.7bn project is so bold that it might even be called a gamble. At a critical moment in Eurotunnel's brief existence, it brings to the job one of the grittiest figures on the City scene, a man who has fought flerce battles and bent many a strong soul to his will: many a strong soul to his will; just the person, in fact, to drive out doubt and get things

But for a job where he will have to coax huge sums of money out of investors and quieten political doubters, he may also lack some of the gentler qualities of patience and tact: he has lost battles, too, usually because he could not compromise.

What are not in doubt are Morton's determination to get a job done, the wide experience of industry and finance which he has gained in a fast-moving career, and his knowledge of how things work at the meet ing point of government and Physically, Morton is unmis-takeable. A tall 48-year-old, be has bright blue staring eyes and a permanently hoarse voice that makes listeners want to clear their throats on his behalf. He has a sharp mind and expresses himself clearly, often to the point of being blunt or down-right rude. He can mitigate the effect of that, if he chooses, witha witty turn of phrase. But often he does not choose to, which is why his sharp tongue has some times been called Morton's fork.

Morton was born in South Africa and began life as a management traines with the Anglo - American Corporation which gave him -a scholarship to Oxford, where he determined to make his future in the UK.

After a brief spell with the World Bank, he joined the Wilson Government's newly created Industrial Reorganisation Corporation in 1967 under Lord Kearton, where he was concerned with the future of the steel and nuclear power

When his contract there ended in 1970; he made his first ended in 1970; he made his distraction acquaintance with the City by joining the Drayton group of investment trusts. It was here that his feuding reputation developed when he clashed with the Least Philips Shelbauma and his boss, Philip Shelbourne, and he decided to move on.

In the meantime, Lord Kear-ton had created the British National Oil Corporation to exploit North Sea oil, and he invited his former IRC colleague to be managing director, a job which Morton filled with enthusiasm and success, learning much in the process of how large engineering projects are funded and managed, and of the ways of government.

But his temperament plus ill fortune again combined to force a change: Philip Shel-Department of Energy to advise on the splitting up of BNOC into two bits, a policy which Morton fundamentally opposed. And so once more he departed, this time to become a freelance

However, his powers as a trouble-shooter had been spotted by the Bank of England which engineered his appointment as chief executive of Guinness Peat, the City banking and commodities company which had been brought to the point Euro tunnel

City's second ranks, and it may be that Morton's feet were anyway beginning to itch again (though he will retain the chairmanship at his old company after he moves to Eurotunnel).

He was headhunted essentially by the Bank and expects to spend most of his time at Eurotunnel which will pay an appropriate portion of his f150,000-a-year salary.

"If you look at my career," he said last night, "what comes up again and again is the financing and organisation of large projects. I think I'm good at putting the pieces together."

Yet the job at Eurotunnel puts Morton in the front line to an extent which has not applied to his previous posts. Apart from the scale and political complexities of the project there is no Lord Kearton-as there was at BNOC-to provide fatherly guidance and advice. Morton certainly has the self-confidence to lead from the front, but the challenge is bigger than any he has faced so far.

Morton's immediate task is an urgent one: to stop the rot at Eurotunnel caused by the recent string of resignations; and res-tore the credibility of the pro-ject. Its name had already been damaged by the trouble it had raising the first £209m financing last autumn, and it was only just getting over that when this week's departure of Sir Nigel Broackes, Lord Pennock, the chairman, and Mr Michael Julien, the deputy chief executive raised serious doubts as to whether it would ever get off the ground

All this will require some inspiring feats of leadership and much hard work with the institutions which will be asked to stump up the next round of

Morton's reasonable command of the French language may help his links with the French management of with the French management of the project which has so far won as much admiration as the side has generated

Politically, too, the Channel Tunnel Bill still has to be steered safely through Parliament. It will shortly reach the committee stage in the House of Lords where some 10,000 people have demanded the right t opetition against it, according to Flexilink which is organising the opposition.

Another political rock in its path is a possible general election. An early election would delay the Bill, even if the Conservatives were returned, simply by disrupting the Parliamentary timetable. A Conservative defeat would considerably more damaging; it would almost certainly lead to the project being shelved while there was a public inquiry.

At that stage it is now daunt-ingly clear that the tunnel project could, for the second time in not much more than a decade, collapse. "I don't believe it's in danger of col-lapse. If I did I wouldn't be here," Morton says.

Fail party three seats short of alliance to force concessions out a parliamentary majority.

He called it "an excellent esult" and said: "Fianna Fail will now form a government which will, for a full term, implement a programme of national recovery designed to restore balance in the public finances while tackling the problems of unemployment, emigration and excessive levels of taxation.

Yet less than a week ago Mr Haughey had declared that the worst possible outcome would be a "hung" parliament of the sort which he is now facing, for the second time in five years.

Yesterday's Dublin newspapers were full of talk of Barring unforseen developments. Mr Haughey will be elected prime minister when the Dail resumes on March 10.

Thereafter things are not so clear. The most important issue facing Fianna Fail is the economy and, more specifically, the budget, likely to be tabled before the end of next month. before the end of next month.

Mr Haughey is committed to curbing the huge national debt by restraining public spending and has said he will have to accept the bulk of tough budgetary proposals left by the outgoing government headed by Dr Carret Fitzgerald's Fine Gael.

But if Mr Haughey wants to underpin his minority position by securing some kind of pact with the Marxist Workers Party, or independents such as Dublin left-winger Mr Tony Gregory, as he did in 1982, he will face demands to protect social welfare, health and un-

MR CHARLES HAUGHEY has support any government which put a brave face on the outcome imposes cuts in these areas. of this week's general election Already, Mr Gregory and others in Ireland which left his Fianna are seeking to form a left

Mr Haughey would seem to have the choice, however, of ignoring the Left on the budget and relying on Fine Gael and the Progressive Democrats (the new force which emerged from the election with 14 seats) not to oppose measures aimed at dealing with the country's economic problems. Dr Fitz-Gerald and other Fine Gael leaders have said their party would support tough action on the economy.

In the short term, Fine Gael has little interest in another poll as it needs to recover from the loss of 17 seats and a slump in its share of the vote to its lowest level for 30 years.

Much of this leaked away to the Progressive Democrats which now occupy a key position in Irish politics, even if they have not yet achieved their aim of breaking the Fianna Fail/Fine Gael mould.

Led by Mr Desmond O'Mailey, a former Fianna Fail Minister, the Progressive Democrats played a large part in denying Mr Haughey a majority.

The other important question mark left by the election hangs on Mr Haughey's attitude towards the Anglo-Irish agreement on Northern Ireland signed by Dr FitzGerald in 1985. He has talked of taking "diplomatic and political" action to change Article One of the Accord, which recognises the right of Northern Ireland to remain part of Britain until a majority there decides other-wise. Mr Haughey believes this contravenes the Republic's con-stitutional claim to Irish unity.

There will be strong pressure There will be strong pressure on him to maintain the agreement from Fine Gael, the Progressive Democrats, Labour and the Workers' Party which all back the accord. The Social Democratic and Labour Party, the biggest nationalist party in the north, will also seek to patch up recently strained relations with Mr Haughey and titons with Mr Haughey and persuade him to keep the agreement on the tracks. Another restraining factor is that Unionists in the north are hoping Mr Haughey will wreck

A WEEK after pleading guilty to two charges and paying over $9m to settle others, Mr Martin Siegel remains an enigma. As the most gifted and likeable victim yet of Wall Street's in-sider trading scandal, he is also the least explicable: why did Mr Siegel, 38, risk a brilliant career, a $2m salary and the security of his wife and three children for an alleged $700,000 in bank bills stuffed in brief cases and extra profits for his department?

with sacks of money, that's not Wall Street."

On February 13, a Friday, Mr Siegel pleaded guilty to run-ning a ring to profit from in-side information on takeover stocks while he was a star in the mergers and acquisitions department of Kidder. Peabody from 1984 to early 1986. The charge said the ring made "millions of dollars in illegal profits" for Kidder.
Mr Siegel also settled (without admitting) a civil complaint from the Securities and Exchange Commission that from 1982 to 1985, he sold information for his own profit to Mr Ivan Boesky, the disgraced speculator in takeover situations (or arbitrageur) who has been co-operating with the investigation for nine months.

Outside Wall Street, many people see Mr Siegel as typical of a whole generation of bright young Americans, who have been attracted to investment banking by its glamour, high stakes and big money and are morally untutored.

Wall Street is the gold rush moral compass." of the 1980s," says Mr Ira Sorkin, a lawyer formerly at the SEC, who last year lead the case against another insider ring, the knew he was doing wrongso-called Yuppie Five. during the McCarthy era. Mr Siegel grew up in Massachusetts under the shadow of financial difficulties. His father filed for bankruptcy just after Martin graduated at 19, with a degree in chemical engineer-security caused him to abandon a corporate career (briefly at Eastman Kodak and Raytheon) and head for Wall Street by way of Harvard. For years. Mr Siegel is said to have lived modestly. But in 1981, he married a second time and started building an expensive country house on Long Island Sound. Wall Street bankers say Mr Siegel would have been earning considerably less than the $2m-odd he ultimately achieved and he had a very high opinion of his own worth.

He also appears to have fallen prey to Mr Boesky's spell: his immense wealth, his vast house in Westchester County, his tennis game, Mr Siegel may have approached Mr Boesky around the time of his defence of Martin Marietta against a bid from Bendix in 1982. The SEC alleges that from then on, he received one payment a year for three years from Mr Boesky's agents at "a con-spicuous public location."

However, by 1984, according to the investigators, Mr Siegel had changed tack. Their charge that he forsook Mr Boesky, and his own profit, for a scheme to make money for Kidder, Peabody is much more damaging to Wall Street. It alleges that insider trading was not confined to an outside arbi-trageur such as Mr Boesky but was practised in the risk arbitrage departments of bluechip firms. As well as arresting two Kidder arbitrageurs from that period and the general partner in charge of arbitrage at Goldman. Sachs on Mr Siegel's evidence, the US Attorney has also subpocnaed the two firms and taken away

Kidder, Peabody strongly denies that Mr Siegel was responsible for setting up the bank's risk arbitrage depart-ment and all three individuals and the two firms deny any wrongdoing. But there is a widespread feeling that the intense pressure to create profit, which has swelled both mergers and acquisition departments and risk arbitrage, is also breaking down the "Chinese Wall" that is supposed to stop the passage of secret corporate information between them. "Risk arbitrage departments are the Achilles heel," says Prof Hayes.

The signs are that Mr Siegel was becoming increasingly anxious about being found out. In April 1985, he told an interviewer that he feared his telephones were bugged. In February, 1986, he left Kidder to be co-head of Drexel Burnham's mergers and acquisitions department. He did not have long. On November 14, the SEC announced that Mr Boesky had disgorged $100m in profits and penalties and had been co-operating. Mr Boesky

Reform of education

From the Executive Director, Staff Licison Group

Sir,—It is absolutely essential that a thorough debate fakes place on the whole issue of how the British educational system should work. The articles by Joe Rogaly (February 11 and 12) suggest that Kenneth Baker's plans may be even more radical than they seem, surely that is the whole basis of trying to re-assess a system for the future.

This organisation has long pressed for a national core curriculum since we have believed that this would dissolve some of the anomolies that exist in the educational system at pre-

It seems ironic that if we are to have a mobile workforce, institute high technology techniques, participate fully at a European level that we should not be in a position whereby of England should not be able to move their parents to the south of England and receive a similar educational curriculum. Running a council

From the Leader, Islington Borough Council

Sir,—If Cilr Heseltine (February 10) looks at public companies quoted on the Stock Exchange which are of similar size to Islington Council and have an annual turnover of approximately fibn, be'll find their average gearing is 20 per cent-30 per cent.

If he sets our debt of £1bn against the council's total assets of £31bn, he'll find our gearing is 28 per cent. We believe we're operating no differently from commercial organisations Indeed, the banking industry regards local authorities as a better credit risk than most public companies where borrowing and lending are concerned. The greater part of our debt -£650m-arises from tradi-tional borrowing, ie, from the government's annual capital allocation which allows us to borrow money to be repaid over seven to 60 years, a period set out in legislation. The remainder comprises our leasing obligations and common with other local post-graduation salaries of authorities, has sought to sustain vital housing capital programmes in the inner city, minimise the effect of govern-ment ratecapping and defend

The 25 per cent increase in staff to which Clir Heseltine refers, is, at this stage, regret-tably still a proposal, not a commitment. The jobs we want to create are real jobs providing much needed services for the community and much needed work for local people in an area where unemploy-ment is over 20 per cent. Unlike Cllr Heseltine and hiscolleagues, we are in the business of regeneration, not degeneration.

Cuts in grants

From Professors D. Chambers

and T. Nicholson Sir,-We write as two teachers at the London Busines School, now (as reported by your correspondent, February 13) under starter's orders from the University Grants Committee to take a 40 per cent cut in its grant while increasing the throughput of degree students in about the same proportion. We are doubly interested parties since our own teaching field (production operations, the management of manufacturing) is probably the area most at risk under the proposed dispensation.

LBS can respond in two obvious ways: by substituting more specialised for its two-year shorter, master's programme, and by roughly tripling student fees (to about £5,500 a year). The US offers instructive models There you find a plethora of programmes labelled MBA and the wise employer follows the rule of caveat emptor. Over the past decade 64 per-cent of LBS graduates have gone on to work in manufacturing and the non-financial service sectors and 68 per cent of master's students have been would plummet as the UGC's new policy began to bite, and indeed the school might begin described by the nameless vicechancellor.

The UGC came under fire recently from the House of Commons select committee on education because the shock therapy it administered in 1981 had done most damage in precisely the fields where national needs are most press-ing. As the curtain rises again, what we see looks depressingly tike the same old stage-set. Management competes with the other professions and careers for the most capable and creative members of each successive age-cohort. A main part of LBS's remit has been to help recruit a greater and more talented share of the cohort into management and to help channel them into every sector of industry and commerce. The school can absorb these cuts, but at the cost of tying itself more exclusively to the needs of the financial sector and of drawing in a narrower range of students. Is that what anybody even the fumbling UGC, really wants? (Professor) D. J. Chambers. (Professor) T. A. J. Nicholson. Sussex Place NW1

The vanishing independents

From Mr H. Lennon

Sir,-Congratulations, at last an "independent" journalist.
Teresa Hunter (February 14)
has aptly summarised the ramifications of the Financial Services Act from the point of view of the investing public and the true independent intermediaries. .

The act is to a large extent At a tripled fee, LBS would self defeating, instead of a need to tilt both recruitment wider unbiased consumer choice, a narrower and in many cases fied or biased consumer

The contraction of the independent intermediary service may be even greater than is generally realised. I believe that, unlike the London based independents, the majority of provincial intermediaries are sole proprietors existing on gross incomes of £15,000 to £25,000 per annum before expenses. How can such operacosts referred to of £900 membership admission to an SRO, plus £4,000 towards a compensation fund, plus escalating annual membership subscriptions estimated to double at least by next year to £600 per annum, plus individual professional indemnity cover costing in the region of £1,500 per Nick Bunker's article on the life assurance industry in the same issue indicates that one of the front rank mutuals is expecting to lose 25 per cent of its independent intermediaries. I would suggest over 50 per cent will be lost and that by the time the "Group of 13" gets its act together and institutes its no doubt formidable campaign towards educating the public, regarding the merits of independent advice, the public will have problems finding the true independents.

H. Lennon, 39, Beaucierk Road, St. Annes-on-Sea, Lancs.

Regional pay and policy

From Mr G. Riley Sir,-Both the recent surges in popularity for "performance related pay" and the end to national pay bargaining reflect the view that pay negotiations should not be confined to some "national" numeraire which considerably restricts wage flexibility.

It is thoroughly desirable collective bargaining should become more decentral-ised. Wages in "depressed" regions need to be lower to-reflect differences in living costs, changing—comparative advantage and as an incentive for firms considering re-location.

Unfortunately, too much of current infrastructural investment acts to persuade businesses to stay in the south-east (notably the M25; Channel Kenneth Clarke's call for greater regional pay variation needs to be supplemented with a much stronger and active regional policy than the government has so far found fit to provide. There are many parts the North's infrastructure which require renewal, which together with sensible local wage flexibility would make many locations even more

Kunick to return to market via USM quote

By Philip Coggan

Kunick Leisure Group, the amusement machine company which owns the London Dungeon, announced at yesterday's AGM that it was planning to join the Unlisted Securities Market via an introduction. Runick's shares are currently trade on the over-the-counter market.

The company has had an on-off history of stock market quotes. In its earlier incarnation as a clothing manufacturer, its share listing was cancelled in August 1978, relisted in October 1979 and suspended in February 1981. Then in 1983 Sir Fred Pontin and Mr Don Robinson, Hull City Football Club's chairman, injected some of their leisure interests into the group.

In early 1985, the company anticipated Joining the USM during the year but instead the South African group Kersaf, which owns the Sun Kersaf, which owns the Sim-City entertainment complex, injected capital by taking a 40 per cent stake. That hold-ing eaused Kunick problems later in the year when the group bought Allied Enter-tainments, Mr Harvey Gold-smith's rock promotion group.

for £6.75m. Rock stars were none too keen on supporting a group with South African links and Kunick sold the group back to Goldsmith for £3.4m eight months later. Then a deal to purchase Nomis, the company which managed pop group Wham! was abandoned when Mr George Michael, half of the group, decided to pursue a solo career.

Sir Fred Pontin and Mr Ronnie Aitken resigned as directors of the group last month. The only comment from either was Mr Aitken's eryptic statement-" Neither Fred nor myself does things lightly."

The correct chairman, Mr David Hudd, yesterday an-nounced that the group had sold its Scunthorpe disco and lee rink to Midsummer Leisure for £750,000. Kunick's last full year pre-tax profits were £2.33m on turnover of

Bond's buying TV-am stake is approved

THE Independent Broadcasting Authority last night gave approval for Mr Alan Bond, the Australian entrepreneur, to acquire a large stake in TV-am, provided that he only exercised 10 per cent of the voting rights in the breakfast television station.

Mr Bond recently reached agreement to take a 24.9 per cent stake in TV-am as part of a A$1.1bn (£470m) takeover of the broadcasting interests of Mr Kerry Packer's Consolidated Press Holdings.

However, when TV-am was floated on the stock market last year it was stipulated that no new shareholder should own more than 10 per cent of the voting shares.

The IBA said it would approve the transfer of the stake to Bond Corporation provided that it was reduced to 20 per cent within 12 months and the new owner only exercised 10 per cent of the voting rights.

The IBA said it had con-sulted both TV-am and the Bond Corporation before reaching its decision.

Shares in Avana, the food group fighting a takeover bid from Ranks Hovis McDongall. rose strongly yesterday, to close at 743p, up 23p on the day, following a statement on Thursday that it had received unsolicited inquiries from other potential bidders.

Avana's statement, issued in response to a request for clarification from the Takeover Panel, said no discussions were in progress with other parties.

There have been market rumours that the other potential suitors may have included Associated British Foods and Unigate, the milk company.

Small investors tune in to Capital Radio flotation

BY RICHARD TOMKINS

THE OFFER for sale of shares in Capital Radio, the London independent radio station. proved to have been heavily oversubscribed following a wave of interest in the issue from small investors.

Members of the public put in 134.860 applications for 220.8m shares and 134 employees put in applications for 445.650 shares. With only 3.91m shares on offer, the issue was subscribed 57 times.

Consequently the shares will be severely rationed. About nine out of every 10 applicants will he eliminated from the allocation altogether through a ballot, and most of the success-ful applicants will receive only a small proportion of the shares they applied for.

The average size of applica-tion from members of the public was for about 1.650 shares, which confirms predictions that small investors would merge as heavy buyers of the issue in the wake of the strong start to dealings in British Air-

The high level of subscription has increased the possibi-lity that the shares will go to a premium when dealings begin on Friday next week. Some stockbrokers' analysts are pre-dicting a 10p to 15p premium above the 105p offer price, and one forecast an opening price

City institutional investors, however, who are the usual buyers of shares in the aftermarket, may regard the issue as too small for them to be able to build up a reasonable size of holding. If small investors emerge as strong sellers, the premium could therefore be limited by a low level of institutional demand. Sir Richard Attenborough, Capital Radio's chairman, said he was delighted at the extent of the interest in the issue.

"We thought that the issue would be popular, especially among our listeners, but the overwhelming response has exceeded any pointers suggested by other recent broadcasting issues," he said.

"In our method of balloting and allocation we have taken all the reasonable steps open to us to meet the smaller applications, but inevitably, many of the 135,000 applicants will be disappointed."

Gold rose $4.75 an ounce from Thursday's close in the London bulkon market yesterday to finish at $3391,400. The metal opened at $338.3382, and traded between a high of $4001,4001, and a low of $3571,3372. Feats about the Brazilian debt crasts tended to gush gold firmer but the extent of the use was limited as traders awaited the outcome of this weekend's meeting of G-7 finance ministers.

strongly late in the session as the market penetrated overhead support to touch off ssion house stops, reports Drexel Burnham Lambert. The market was steady on mixed buying and shortcovering. Platinum futures also railled as stops were hit while silver futures followed. but in lighter volume. Copper futures continued steady on follow-through buying. Crude oil futures reacted on the up-side to a strengthening in world oil prices. Good local and trade buying prompted mixed short-covering, though In coffee futures a feeling that the forthcoming ICO meeting may result in an agreement on quotas led to short-covering and fresh buy-ing which touched off comthe market in the face of producer price-fix selling. Cocca futures also rallied on a combination of short-covering, buy-stops and technical buying, despite Brazilian scale-up selling. Industry Industry buying was also noted. Unconfirmed reports of buying by India led to a steady opening in sugar futures, but price-fix selling at the highs prompted a sell-off hefore trade support at the lows rallied prices. The grains markets were more active than late with the wheat and maize futures sharply higher on reports of buying interest by the USSR for US grains and the possibility of further sales to China and Poland under the subsidised export programme. The soyabean complex railied in sympathy.

Dollar hostage to G-7

THE DOLLAR showed little overall change in currency markets yesterday ahead of the meeting of G-7 ministers today and tomorrow. The market was nervous because the outcome of the meeting was far from 1044 on Thursday.

Trading was nervous ahead of the market was nervous because the outrome of the meeting was far from certain. There were reports that an agreed communique had already been drafted in order to overcome any obvious differences between the participating nations. This reinforced the view held by some that there was unlikely to be much chance of nations finding any solution that would support the dollar unless the market saw a real effort to reduce the US budget deficit.

London rates steady

wary of pushing rates lower after Thursday's message from the authorities which was seen as a sign to reduce downward pressure on interest rates at least for the time being Once again the Bank of Eng-land invited discount houses to borrow funds during the afternoon which resulted in 12 day loans at a rate of 11½ per cent. This clearly conforced Thursday's message that a cut in base rates was not on the cards just yet with proximity of the budget suggesting that a cut nearer March 17 seemed more likely. In addition the authorities may have had an eye on this weekend's meet-ing of G-7 ministers before making Weekend interbank money traded between 12 per cent and 10 per cent before finishing at 11 per cent. The Bank of England forecast a shortage of around £1,000m with factors affecting the market including maturing assistance and a take up of Treasury bills together draining 6519m and Exchequer transactions a further £30m. In addition there was a rise in the note circulation of balances £190m below target.

To help alleviate the shortage, the bank offered an early mand of assistance which amounted to purchase of 25m of eligible bank bills in band 2 at 10% per cent.

INTEREST RATES showed little cent and £7m in band 3 at 10% per overall change in the London money cent. In the afternoon the Bank March 27 equal to 1-per cent of market yesterday. Reagan 'unaware of arms cover-up

By Stewart Fleming, US Editor, in Washington

PRESIDENT Ronald Reagan was not aware of any attempt depth of his involvement in the decision to ship US arms to Iran in a diplomatic initiative aimed partly to secure the release of American hostages held in Beirut, the White House said yesterday.

The statement from Mr Martin Fitzwatler, the White House spokesman, came in the midst of another spate of embarrassing disclosures about the Iran Contra affair, including allegations that presidential aides had tried to cover up the extent of the President's involvement in the decisionmaking process as reports of the deal surfaced.

The allegations came amid mounting tension in Washington shead of the release, perhaps as soon as next week, of a report on the role of the National Security Council, the President's advisory committee on security matters. The report is being prepared by a commission appointed by Mr Reagan late last year, headed by former Senator John Tower.

Administration officials who have been surprised by the determination with which the Tower commission has pursued its inquiries have already con-ceded that the commission report promises to provide a much more hard-hitting analy-sis of the Iran affair than had been expected. The New York Times reported yesterday that, in an interview on Thursday, Mr Robert McFarlane, President Reagan's former National adviser who is in hospital after what police say was a suicide attempt, told the commission he had taken part in an effort by White House sides to hide President Reagan's key role in the initiation of the Iran arms deal in

The story and Mr McFarlane's | Wall Street and parts of the statement followed reports earlier in the week suggesting that President Reagan had altered his own version of the initial stages of the arms deal. According to these, Mr told the Mr co-operation with the authoricommission he approved in advance the first shipment of arms to Iran in August 1985, as Mr McFarlane had testified. Then, in a second interview with the commission. Mr Reagan modified his statement to accord with that of Mr Donald Regan, the White House Chief of Staff, who had testified that Mr. Reagan approved the deal only after the first arms shipment.

in another disclosure the Washington Post reported yesterday that in the summer of 1985 the State Department sought to head off a White House-sponsored -initiative House-sponsored aimed at trying to persuade Egypt to join the US in an attack on Libya.
The report said that, as over

Iran policy, the Administration was bitterly divided on the proposal.

Separately, yesterday Representative Jack Kemp, the influential conservative Republican member of Congress who is seeking the party's presidential nomination, sought to weaken the position of Mr George Shultz, the Secretary of State, and at the same time polish his conservative credentials—by calling for Shultz's resignation.

Pressure grows on Opec price deal

By Richard Johns

THE Organisation of Petroleum Exporting Countries' price structure is coming under mounting pressure as a result of a sharp fall in demand for Gulf crude.

Gulf state oil ministers are meeting tomorrow in Doha. Qatar, under the aegis of the Gulf Co-operation Council for the second time in eight days to discuss the market amid speculation that an extraordinary Opec conference may be called.

In particular, the plight of Qatar, a GCC member which has received negligible "nominations "-or prices-for its oil for March, has created alarm.

Oatar is understood to have informed Opec's secretariat in Vienna about the drastic fall in demand it is suffering largely as a result of the system of price differentials agreed at Opec's last full ministerial meeting in Geneva in December.

The system, under which prices are fixed according to differentials based on a central reference price of $18 a barrel for a basket of eight key crudes, took effect three weeks ago.

Aiready, the rigidity of the structure is showing signs of distorting demand. Guif pro-ducers, generally, are facing a fall-off in demand, including both Saudi Arabia and Iran.

The problem is exacerbated by the fact that at least two Opec members, Kuwait and the United Arab Emirates, are not observing output limits set in December. The fear within Opec is that, because of these countries' overproduction, other members will reduce prices below the levels agreed in December as a means of reaching the production quotas allowed them under their agreements.

Opec's ministerial committee on price differentials was due to meet in Vienna on March 9, but those talks are understood tively till April 1. A full ministerial meeting could come SDOBET.

It is believed that Saudi Arabia will tomorrow put pres-sure on the UAE and Kuwait to limit ther output to the levels allotted them in December.

The agreement set a notional ceiling of 15.8m barrels a day for overall Opec outputs. In practice, that meant about 16.5m b/d after taking into account Iraq's non-compliance and the 350,000 or so b/d produced from the Neutral Zone (shared by Saudi Arabia and Kuwait which neither regards as part of their allocations).

The previous GCC meeting, on February 14, concentrated on the refusal of Dubai, a member of the UAE, to observe any restraint and resulted in a commitment by it to cut output by 10 per cent.

This time, Mr Hisham Nazer, Saudi Arabian Minister of Oil. is exepcted to confront the issue, which could disrupt the whole accord.

One senior Opec official observed yesterday: "The next two or three weeks will be critical for us and a test of our resolve which has come sooner than we expected."

THE LEX COLUMN

Ever increasing circularity

It is customary for occidental investors to shake their heads in puzzlement at the apparent excesses of the Tokyo equity market; if Japanese shares were really valued on a dividend-discount basis the market's current p/e of about 50 would indeed be sign of some collective delusion. Few remark that there are asset markets nearer home which seem to be displaying some of characteristics.

House property in London, for example, shows every sign for example, shows every sign of being an investment market which is driven more than anything by weight of money—and where wholesale liquidation seems even less likely than it does in the savings-driven equity funds of Tokyo. Given some remarkable figures from the building societies, portraying a sharp decline in the delinquency rate among UK mortgage borrowers, fear of overgeared investors pulling the rug from under the price of these assets can for the present be banished to the Freudian attic. Freudian attic.

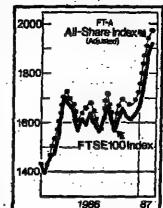

There is, moreover, a growing international similarity in the approach to equities which owes more to the nature of the market than to hopes pluned on post-G7 interest rate cuts. The circular re-rating of drug companies - Glaro is now having to chase the tail of an AIDS-ignited Wellcome price— sufficiently proves that Western investors are not immune to the speculative dance of death.

Big Bang

If Thursday night's turnout at the annual thrash of the Society of Investment Analysts is anything to go by. Big Bang is not baving such a devastating effect on the brokers' cash flow as the Jeremians predicted. All the firms seem to have booked the usual number of tables and hospitality suites at the Gros-venor House Hotel. Figures released by the Stock Exchange on the same day also give the same superficial appearance of profits as usual. They show daily equity turnover, excluding than 50 per cent higher than the pre-Big Bang period, while commissions are reported to be down by as much as 36 per cent.

The problem is that about Park half of the turnover is not agency bargains but deals done with market-makers net of commission. So instead of being at similar levels to the fixed com-mission market, it looks as though income is down by about 40 per cent, even before allowance is made for the much thinner market-makers' spread on all stocks. In terms of profitability the picture is still worse, because the cost base is so much more inflated than it was a year ago.

This is only an overview and does not reveal the polarisation that is taking place as the stock market portrays the oligopolis-tic tendencies of so many other competitive markets. Thus brokers with particular angles, such as James Capel's absence of market-making and strong research, or Cazenove's client relationships, may well be doing better than ever in an otherwise cruel world. The other side of this coin is that the middle rank of broking house, without a unique selling proposition, must be finding it impossible to cover the swollen overheads. Which brings us back to the do at the Grosvenor House. Naturally the last thing a suffering firm will do is reveal its pain to the competition by cancelling the usual hospitality suite or cutting the number of fund-manager guests. However, if it is impossible to tell lossmakers by staring a fellow-diner in the eye there are ways of letting rivals know that you feel just terrific: James Capel spurned the Grovenor House altogether and laid on a dinner for 250 at the Inn.on the Alistair Morton is indeed a wise choice to fill in the blank. Mr Morton, experienced in holding together the finance of large projects, is just the sort of person to lick doubtful bankers into shape. It is also a recommendation that he has made his present position in the City by taking on another apparently doomed company, Guinness Peat, and pulling it back on some sort of track, raising a fair amount of equity meanwhile.

While the crumbling of its hoard—exeunt Lord Pennock, Sir Nigel Broackes, Mr Michael Julien—clearly threatened Eurotunnel's survival, that fact is itself rether paradoxical. Al-though no sane investor is go-ing to hand over hillions to an unnamed management (shades of the South Sea Bubble) any eventual returns from the tunnel stand to be affected re-markably little by the contributions of the present financial management. It ought to be much more cirtical that investors are convinced by the engineering and the traffic profections on which Eurotunnel is based. Further, if Mr Morton can convince them, saving the UK Government all manner of embarrassment, he will have earned his peerage.

Insiders

The sending down of Mr Dennis Levine for two years may seem like a victory for the forces of regulation, law and order. However, it seems a remote possibility that the legal systems on either side of the Atlantic can stamp out anything more than those cases of insider trading where the spectacular scale of the operation commands attention.

The main characteristic of the recent exposure of this crime in the US is that they involve members of securities houses using information received as advisers to make profits at a client's expense. To the extent -pace Mr Geoffrey Collier-that the same thing has happened in the UK it would seem appropriate for corporate with their advisers which could form a base for legal action in the event of abuses of confidential information. In this country insider trading is a crime for which only individuals can be penalised. The possibility of heavy financial penalties should If the chairman's identity is help further to focus the minds of firms on the possibility of Eurotunnel's feasibility Mr abuses by their employees.

Off the record, old boy...

HEN W. E. Gladstone, then Chancellor of the Exchequer, sent papers on annuities legislation to a friendly journalist in 1865 with encouragement to write about them, he gave instructions not to disclose the source of the infor-mation. Little bas changed in the intervening years—except, alas, the willingness of Chancellors to pass on secret documents. Now, at 4 pm on most weekdays, a group of journalists troop up a spiral staircase to a turret room in the Palace of Westminster-approin the Palace of Westminster—appropriately, perhaps, just above the office of that most adept of political operators. Sir Edward du Carn. The journalists' purpose is to attend a meeting of the Parliamentary Lobby to be briefed by Bernard Ingham, the Prime Minister's press secretary, again on the agreed basis that nothing said at the briefing should he attributable to him or to Downing

The Lobby—or, rather, the nature of these regular briefings—has again become a subject of controversy. The independent newspaper is boycotting them; The Guardian has rejected the non-attribution rule. The result has been a lengthy and as yet unresolved internal debate about the role of the Lobby, Once described by the shadow Home Secretary. Gerald Kaufman, as an extremely secret organisation that everyone at Westminster knows about," the Lohby consists of 150 political journalists whose job is to report on behind the-scenes government and party matters. They are distinct from the press gallery and sketch writers, a craft pioneered by Charles Dickens, who concentrate solely on what is said in parliament.

The Downing Street briefings are only a small part of the way political journalists obtain news and govern-ments seek to influence how it is pre-

Political reporting is unusual, pre-cisely because of the very close mutual dependence between MPs and Ilm press. At its most absurd, some mem-hers—like Peter Bruinvels and Geoffrey Dickens—are widely known, and indeed pride themselves on being known, as "rent-aduotes" for pronouncing publicly on every subject that might catch a headline. More significantly, there is an unusual degree of informality involved in the relationship.

Such proximity is why the Lobby bears that name. Following two Fenian (Irish-American) bomb outrages—wa would now call them incidents-at Westminster, it was decided in 1884 to restrict access to the Members' Lobby. This is the area just outside the House of Commons chamber where MPs gather to gossip and to collect mail, messages and public documents from the Vote Office. The offices of the various party whips all open on to it.

Among the exceptions to the 1884 restrictions were political journalists on a special list kept by the Serjeant-at-Arms, the administrator of the Commons. That remains the basis of Access to the Lobby, and other parts of the Commons closed to the public, remains the main advantage of accreditation. After a 10 pm vote, the Lobby is the place to accost a Secretary of State who throughout the day, is safely protected against indiscretion by his private office and departmental press offices. But late at night, and unchaperoned, he might be (and often is) willing to talk more informally and indiscreetly. If there is a back bench buzz on some subject—say against some government action—then the Lobby is where it will surface after a vote.

Outsiders, including journalists, are excluded during votes; hence the Speaker's cry of "Clear the Lobbies" when announcing a division.

But the Lobby, its adjoining corridors and nearby Annie's Bar (reserved solely for MPs and Lobby members) are places for gossip rather than startling leaks. Westminster is a small village where the connections between an observed chat and a subsequent story are quickly made; thus, leaks are likely to be heard at lunch or dinner away from Westminster. (The favoured resigurants tend to vary; in a kind of Gresham's law, the more popular a place becomes the less its value as a venue for indiscretion.)

The late Richard Crossman, a minister in Harold Wilson's Labour Government, faithfully recorded in his published diaries (more reflective but less accurate than those of Cabinet colleague, Barbara Castle) his frequent lunches with journalists, notably those he hosted at London's Garrick Club. Of one, he noted: "It was a gay and pleasant affair. One of the sad things I have to admit is that it was delightfully productive that it was delightfully productive that it was delightfully productive." ductive. I can't deny that it was a result of my entertainment that a charming paragraph appeared in the gossip column of The Times about the wonderful work of John Silkin and myself . . . journalists.

The relationship is not ope-sided. Journalists get good stories out of these selective leaks, or briefings. One of the joys of political reporting is that there is no monopoly of information. Not only are there competing parties easer to present their views but the 650 MPs are themselves very much individual operators, each with personal ambitions. Similarly, the Government is in no sense a monolithic entity—unlike, say, a major company presenting a unified face to the world.

Almost all such conversations are Almost all such conversations are on "Lobby terms"—that is, on the understanding that the source is not revealed. (It might be, and often is, suspected, but nothing is provable.) It was only in the 1930s and 1940s that a more formal system of collective briefing by Downing Street officials appeared. In part, this reflected growing demands on the time of the Prime Minister and other ministers, who were not as readily accessible as before. The not as readily accessible as before. The view of the Lobby as a tightly-knit secret organisation emerged in the 1950s and 1960s. Such an atmosphere is conveyed in Downing Street Diaries, an account by the late Sir Harold Evans an account by the late Sir Harold Evans of his period as press secretary to the administrations of Harold Macmillan and Alec Douglas-Home. He concluded: "I remember no serious disagreements between the Lobby group and myself during those seven years." Sir Harold remarked that the Lobby was: "as anxious as anyone else that there should be no transpessions leading to loss of be no trangressions leading to loss of privileges."

The days in which each of his nuances was treated as being significant are long gone. The size of the Lobby has not only roughly doubled but its membership is younger and more fluid. Hence, there is less readiness to accept the old conventions of absolute secrecy (never admit to an outsider that the meetings exist, let alone disclose what

Moreover, the Lobby's role as a dis-seminator of information is much reduced. Ministers seldom appear at its meetings, apart from the leaders of the Commons and the Lords who give weekly briefings on Thursdays and Fridays about the following week's business. Prime Minister Thatcher has appeared only once in six years. She prefers on-the-record interviews with the Press, television and radio, as do other mini-

The daily briefings by Downing Street press offices—one at 11 am at humber 10 and the other at 4 nm at 100 trainster are now mainly routine affairs: very few major stories emerge. The first traditionally the tradition of the stories are traditionally to the stories are traditionally traditally traditionally traditionally traditionally traditionally tra Prime Minister's day.

It is what happens next that is more controversial. Ingham has argued that what he is doing is off ring Euis'ance. Downing Street rarely makes announcements of substance—that is for Whitehall departments. What lugham can do is to reply to questions and give a steer—in Sir Harold Evans' phrase "shooting down flights of fancy. trimming them down to size or giving them the right proportions." Ingham argues that his comments should remain unattributable primarily because of the constraints imposed by Parliament as the main place where Government announcements should be made.

The critics argue that the system is open to abuse, Journalists can spoon-fed, encouraged to lazy habits (though their diet would be meagre indeed if they relied on the daily briefings). A remark by a Press officer can also be presented as the view of several ministers. Moreover, critics say, the non-attributable rule allegedly gives the craments the ability to "set the attrial" of political debate.

The style of Harold Wilson in what in November 1366: "I saw " lefthing to be hardles the Tobby billiantly he handles the Lobby. and the mat out of his hand when certhing very sensibly, " or pedestrianly, in a style with

Some of the recent strains have refigited not only changed journalistic attitudes but also Thatcher's dominant style of leadership, as faithfully reflected by Ingham. His influence as one of her longest-serving and most valued advisers is undoubted, and he is seen by journalists as an accurate messenger of her views and moods.

Yet the very directness of Ingham's style has led to rows. Outsiders have portrayed him as a mixture of Rasputin and Machiavelli, though those who know and Macchavell, though those who know him best regard bim more as a bluff Yorkshireman whose occasional outbursts (marked by the exclamation "dammit") are quickly followed by smiles. Yet, as the Westland affair and the row about his involvement in the leaking of a law officer's letter showed, this approach can, at the most euphemistic cause misunderstandings. In the sense Ingham symbolises Mrs Thatcher's way of running Whitehall. During his evidence given in Australia in the MI5 "book" case Sir Robert Armstrong. the Cabinet Secretary. described the system of unattributable opinion without acepting responsibility." But it is up to journalists to assess the mistic, cause misunderstandings. In that information and put it in context.

The advocates of change draw comparisons with overseas experience. In West Germany the Federal Chancellor's spokesman attends Cabinet meetings and talks publicly. In the US the president's press secretary is continually on television. Yet the parallels can often be misleading. Even in the US the White House press secretary often makes remarks non-attributably as well as attri butably during the same briefing. More notoriously, when Henry Kissinger was US Secretary of State his disguise, as: "a very high official on the secretary of state's plane" in his globe-trothing days was instantly penetrated worldwide.

Even in Britain the daily Lobby briefings are unusual only for their prominence, or notoriety. The political journalists working for the Sunday papers have their own group, with far more frequent, informal meetings with ministers than their daily counterparts. Similarly there are groups of other specialist journalists defence, dipomatic, labour and motor correspondents arguably more dependent on a smaller range of sources than those working in the adversarial world of Westminster.

It is questionable whether it will be possible to maintain the Lobby as it has evolved, given the manifest internal and external disagreements about its role. The report last December of an inquiry conducted by a group from the Lobby's own elected committee recognised that maintaining the system would be difficult; avoiding a breakdown would require restraint on both sides. The old mutual conventions are no longer generally accepted.

A move to a modest form of attribution-identifying Downing Street officials as the source of briefings-is still resisted by the Government and by many Lobby members. They fear that a switch to attribution would soon break down and that, quickly, a small group of favoured correspondents would be privately briefed by Downing Street—as happened with Neville Chamberlain and with what was known as a "White Com-monwealth" of senior Lobby men in the Wilson years: The present system it is argued at least ensures fair treatment between all correspondents.

Yet whatever the outcome of the Lobby's soul-searching—and I write as someone closely involved, as a member of its own inquiry—the regular briefings seem certain to become less significant as a source of information. The main opposition parties are pledged, if they come to power, to move away from a non-attributable system. Sceptics point that the proposes have been produced to the proposes have been made. out that such promises have been made before, and previous experiments in greater attribution have failed. But a proposal to require a written acceptance of the rules for attendance at briefings was recently rejected by the Lobby in a ballot. So strains and conflict look likely to continue with, in the short-term, a two-tier system, possibly leading eventually towards a more open, perhaps mixed attributable and non-attributable,

Nevertheless, many participants feel that the fuss is greatly overdone; the Downing Street briefings have become only a small part of a reporter's life, and in today's circumstances could become even smaller. Most people would agree with the verdict of Sir Tom McCaffrey, who served as James Callaghan's press secretary in Downing Street, that the Lobby system is a "convenience not a convenience." venience, not a conspiracy."

practice of non-attribution at West-minster will remain an inescapable part of political, as all other, journalism. Even The Independent and The Guardian draw the line only at mass briefings; they continue to use other unattributable official and ministerial sources; a destinction which puzzles some participants. It is part of the Faustian pact which journalists make when they work at Westminster. To report on the political process they have to become part of it.

The Long View

Taurus moves into a bull market

THE FIRST thing I heard about the markets on Thursday came from an astrologer. He first forecast that the bull market would continue until May, which was hardly surprising; that is what buil markets are supposed to do. Then, he said something that almost spoiled my breakfast. His studies of the planetary influences were canerly bought, he claimed, by a number of fund managers and unit trusts. After that, it was not at all surprising that equity prices had fallen sharply by lunchtime; had I been a dealer, I might well have concluded that it was time to leave the bull market to the stargazers. To be honest, though, I doubt that any actual dealer had heard this suggestive

What they were likely to have heard was that the latest opinion poll had shown a further gain by the Alliance, which seems to constitute the main threat to a third term for Mrs T. you will get the wrong answer. a shake-out and a turning point

You will greatly reduce that chance if you try to analyse the motives of those in the market. This is a good deal easier than thought-reading and relies simply on a variety of the good old contrarian rule which is one of the basic themes of this column. Simply remember this: dealers usually have a strong motive to try to disturb any long-established trend in the

This is not at all the same as trying to reverse the trend; the dealers love a bull market, and can simply go home and bite their nails in a prolonged bear market. However, the greatest danger to a bull market is that it will blow out in a speculative climax, and the greatest frustration for a dealer is to find that he is facing a bull market with little or no stock on his books.

For both these reasons, an occasional sharp shake-out, which will send some of the more speculative souls running for cover and give dealers an opportunity to restock their books, is more than welcome, and market men are certainly not above provoking it.

It is this kind of short-term movement, reflecting the market's own pattern of behaviour, which chartists are rather good at forecasting with their trend lines and resistance The only difficulty is that, in today's markets, money moves so quickly that the whole process of chart forecasting is of little use to anyone other than professionals.

It is in the futures markets, the quickest and most professional of all, that they wear badge lapels proclaiming "The Trend is my Friend." For the small investors, the trick is not to forecast these shakeouts (Which would be pure kuck) but but there is every chance that to tell the difference between For this purpose, professional pride impets me to repeat: you can't beat the economic fundamentals.

> Those fundamentals have not changed in the past few days. In terms of economic growth, the world outlook is certainly not exciting.

> The outlook for Britain and the US is a good deal brighter, thanks to the recent changes in exchange rates. In both countries, the current account of the balance of payments might well look forbidding for a time; but already the movements in the volume of orders and output is quite strong, and the profits picture is still brighter.

Finally. the picture remains unchanged. We are still in the midst of the great unwinding following the monetary squeeze of the early 1980s. Cash is abundant, and most of it is going into equity markets (and housing in this country). A good deal of the British asset boom is supported by foreign money - overseas banks buying into the British mortgage market and overseas funds piling into selected British equities. The footprints of foreign fund managers are easily seen in the fact that the FTSE 100-share index, which contains just about all the internationally traded stocks, has far out-performed the broader All-Share index,

You will be able to confirm (or modify) this picture simply by watching the statistics and the forecasts as they appear-especially the forward-looking surveys of business opinion. Or perhaps you could save yourself a lot of trouble and ask an astrologer. I do seem to be saying much the same as

The past year has never looked like one in which ICI 1980s. beat its 1984 profits record of £1.034bn, for oil profits have been hit badly by the collapse in prices and fertiliser profits have been wiped out hy severe difficulties in world agricultural markets. Nevertheless, the group's thirdquarter profits were at the top end of expectations and a numher of factors have combined to raise expectations for the fourth quarter.

The main factors will have been exchange rate movements. which could have added up to from, and the elimination of the film associated with the termination of Chevron's Paramust distributorship in the US. The commodity husinesses have heen showing signs of strength. and there will have been a firsttime - albeit small - contribution from Glidden.

Most analysts are looking for £1.02bn overall compared with £912m in 1985, but few will be surprised if the figure goes a little higher. The full-year results for 1986 may yet, therefore, challenge the record of out on Thursday.

After the past six weeks, in which the Dow Jones Industrial Average has risen by an average of 11 points for every trading day, it takes a stubborn and courageous bear to argue with this assessment. Expressed in the annual rates beloved of US statisticians, 11 points a day works out roughly 350 per cent

Obviously, that furious pace is unsustainable for ever—and yet everything "obvious" about the present market has turned out to be completely false. As every hint of a retrenchment turns out to be a buying opportunity of the most lavishly prising that there are virtually no bearish voices left on Wall

For the very few persistent bears who still have the courage to stick their heads above the parapet, there is no mystery about such contradictions. The "low rent crowd" is finally stampeding into Wall Street. says Eliot Janeway, the dean of Wall Street bears, who has been waiting for a crash almost since the day the market started rising five years ago.

However, the real evidence of the aproaching market too. according to Janeway, lies not in the cothusiasm of small-ume punters from Florida Nebraska but in the even lower quality of investment flooding in from an even more benighted part of the world -Japan. That the Japanese are going to be this year's biesest US equities buyers is now an article of faith.

Of course, most analysts do not share Janeway's view that the Japanese are the kiss of death for any market they enter market which is ultimately going to send interest rates skywards and the US economy crashing into recession.

On the contrary, the signs of Japanese buying have provided all Street with a fool-proof rationalisation for an endless bull market when all other explanations fail. Day after day, equity traders report that foreign buying, especially of the blue chip stocks, has powered the market's advance; and it is certainly notable that the Dow and the S&P 500 have performed much more strongly throughout the present rally than the broader-based indices with little foreign interest.

When Lasdo Byrinyi of Brothers estimated this week that 45 per cent of the net buying in an average this year has taken place in the first 30 minutes of trading, this was taken as strong indication of massive money flows across time zones.

The average price earnings 500 is just over 15, compared with a P-E of nearly 50 on the Nikkei-Dow. And even in European markets, P-Es tend to be much higher than on Wall while acknowledging sagely that the Japanese market easy for analysts to argue that stocks remain extrapared with the rest of the have brought some kind of long-term equilibrium to all financial markets, it is certainly arguable that stock valuations around the world might tend to

But none of this logically suggestes that US stock prices must go on rising towards the Japanese levels. Maybe all it means is that, when the crash finally comes, it will be that much worse in Japan.

This year it is rabbits, and everyone knows what rabbits do. Sure enough, the Singapore stock market has taken its cue and is multiplying like crazy.

indeed, some stock analysts have seen their predictions for the year fulfilled in the first three weeks of the lunar calen-dar — and that, of course, raises the question of what is left for the rest of the year. Most observers are predicting the Singapore stock market will finally join most other bourses around the globe and touch a new record in the coming weeks. In fact, just a little hop and it will be there.

The Straits Times index ves-terday closed at 1.062.21, just 10 points shy of the all-time high of 1.071.9 three years ago. The market eased after that re-cord and crashed at the end of 1985 as the collapse in the pro-Anatole Kaletsky perty market and the slowdown in manufacturing and services

Australian brokers say it has one of the best lists of projects of any group. Two new mines—Emu Mine and Lady Bountiful in Western Australia have come onstream this year. Lady Bountiful recently announced increased ore reserves.

Placer Development saw the pportunities in gold faster than almost anyone outside South Africa. This week, the group announced 1986 profits of CST0.3m net — almost double those of 1985. The figure includes a CS90.1m net profit from the flotation last year of 21.4 per cent of Placer Pacific, the group's Australian asso-ciate. This was offset in part by a C$45.9m write-down on North American oil and gas properties, the legacy of a drive into energy which has so far proved far less successful than precious metals.

Trading on a multiple of about 40 times historic earnings, Placer shares are not cheap. But they do offer a chance to invest in three of the most exciting projects around —Misima Island and Porgera, in Papua New Guines, and Big Western says little Bell, Western Australia.

Labour controls

PRIVATE INVESTORS can sleep undisturbed. Roy Hattersley, shadow Chancellor of the Exchequer, has no intention of re-introducing exchange controls or stopping anyone from buying a holiday property

Speaking to the Personal Finance Editors Association this week, Hattersley made clear that any future Labour govern-ment would not try to restrict or control overseas investment by private citizens. "There is no question of individuals having to record £50 in foreign cur-rency in their passports, as in the past," he added.

Hattersley said that re-imposing exchange controls would be impossible in these days of advanced technology since. during the time lag between any announcement being made and the actual controls being implemented, all the "hot" money would already have gone overseas.

What a Labour government would do to encourage financial the UK would be to offer tax ' incentives " threatening to withdraw the existing tax concessions to institutional funds if they continued to invest overseas instead of switching money into the domestic market. Since private citizens did not enjoy directly those tax concessions given to institutional funds, they would be free to do what they liked with their money, including buying an appartment in Spain.

There was, however, cold comfort for investors in Personal Equity Plans (PEPs). Hattersley said a Labour government would remove all tax contween 13 per cent (or whatever cessions—effectively killing the whole idea. He claimed that the rate may become in future) and the 10.5 per cent fixed rate is capitalised on a monthly basis PEPs represented a tax handout to richer people and abolishing over the three-year period. So it would save money.

Instead, Labour would promote wider share ownership by improving schemes enabling all employees, not just directors, to take a stake in the companies for which they worked, with full voting rights for the equity held claimed for the scheme. Before retirement, since you are not repaying capital or endowment policy premiums, you should be able to keep your mortgage at a high level to ensure you receive the full tax relief at a time when your income is near its peak.

Money saved by not repaying capital can be invested for your best advantage, notably to boost your pension. By retaining a mortgage after retirement, and not repaying the capital, you are in effect using some of the equity on your property to inerease your available capital while continuing to be rligious for tax relief on the interest payments.

In addition, by maintaining a mortgage you reduce the amount of Inheritance Tax that may become payable if you die. If you take out a home loan that qualifies for tax relief, the rate of interest is 12.25 per cent -in line with the standard rate charged by the clearing bank providing the quota of mortgage funds. The rate is 0.25 per cent higher at 12.50 if you are borrowing for a non-qualifying purpose, such as buying a holiday or retirement home.

There are no special charges, like having to take out an expensive insurance policy to cover the Joan. WHYTHE SMART MONEY IS GOING INTO GILTS

Many forecasters believe the budget (now fixed for March 17th) will bring a fall in interest rates.

The Stockmarket will anticipate such a fall, and so should you.

When interest rates fall, there will be significant profits to be made. For example, a 2% drop in interest rates could mean an 18% rise in capital value, on long-dated gilts.

Gilts still offer a return of over 10% a year—over 6% higher than the current inflation rate. It's time to buy—the clever investor is already beginning to do so.

When credit is due

HOW WOULD you feel if your practical problems. chritling him to report the facility to a central credit totted up?

Probably rather indignant. You expect your bank to keep your financial affairs confidential. And such an arrangement might seem to you the financial equivalent of "1984."

Nothing like this is likely to happen in the foreseeable future. But there are signs that the banks are beginning to conabout their personal borrowers have begun to float a few trial balloons. Barclays Bank, for example, is currently running an advertisement which dis-cusses the virtues of central credit registries such as they tage in the US.

Seymour Fortescue, a general manager of the bank, says these registries " are a proven way of reducing debt problems for both ender and horrower," and he Indicates that Barclars is taking stens in this direction.

What is prompting the banks to look more seriously at something they have previously vigorously rejected is the alarm-ing rise in personal borrowing in the UK. Increasingly they are accepting the view that one of the reasons behind it is an individual's ability to borrow from a large number of different lenders at the same time: credit cards, shops, banks, fin-ance houses and so on-and run up massive debts.

If there was only a central registry, the reasoning goes. where someone could keep an individual's total borrowing, then londers would be much less likely to extend credit to a percan placado deceir in debt.

bank manager required you, as confidentiality, Although bank, all "white" and "black' a condition for giving you an ing secrecy is not protected by formation to a couple of credit overdraft, to sign an agreement statute in the UK (as it is in registries, and the FHA itself Switzerland, for example), has been pressing the banks for there is enough case law to years to join their scheme. registry where details of all make a customer confident of your borrowings (credit cards, winning damages if his bank HP, etc) would be kept and makes an unauthorised disclosure of his financial affairs.

The way round this problem would be to build a waiver into the loan documentation to details of a loan to a credit registry.

But what details should be between "white" information, which means all loans made. sider pooling more information and "black" information which covers only cases of default or on a limited scale, and they excessive arrears, Clearly, for a registry to work effectively. banks would have to report hoth types of information. However, at the moment the clearers are only inclined to report "black" information. Lloyds Bank, for example, 15 believes its relationship with the borrower has effectively been ruptured.

Quite how much further they go, and how fost, is a matter vigorous debate within the banking community. Derek Wanless who heads the consumer banking division of Nat-West, the UK's largest clearer, says his bank will never report "white information" because of client confidentiality. But Barclays seems to be further down that road, partly, it appears, because it has in Barriaycard by far the largest credit card business of any of the clearers.

Japanese shares all seem to me to have ludicrous price earnings ratios. The recently floated Nippon Telegraph and Tele-phone Company has a p/e of over 180. He did, purchasing 1,000 shares at 895p the Japanese insist that all each, charging the then standard commission rate of shares in Japanese companies must be held in Japan.

Investor's Tales

Why did the Japanese insist on this: was it so that it would be easier to confiscate physically share certificates owned by foreigners should Japan fall on "hard times?"

To comply with this require-ment, I hastily telephoned my bank manager who agreed that Lloyds would hold the shares for me in their account with the Bank of Tokyo in Tokyo. This arrangement cost me $27.18 (comprising correspondents' cable charges of £4.03 and their handling charge of £12.10; the bank's cable charge of £7. VAT of £1.05 and the bank's fee of

Despite these charges, Lloyds expected me to sign a statement which read: "I agree that any stocks, shares, bonds or other securities now or hereafter held by your agents abroad or by their nominees to your order on my behalf are so held at my risk and without any responsibility on your part."

seemed to me this meant that if a bank clerk in Tokyo off with my share certificate I would not receive any compensation. I therefore added the words: "other than for negligence or fraud by your agents and/or their nominees before I signed the statement, and Lloyds accepted this.

The next problem in buying shares in an obscure Japanese company is that the only way can find out what is happealing to the share price is to ring a breker, which is not as ensy as simply looking at the share price in the FT.

Kuraray shares then started a fairly rapid decline. Why? Again, unlike buying shares in British or even an American company, there appeared to be no cheap and readily available daily publication in English that included reports on small Jananese companies.

I therefore "chickened out" and sold my Kuraray shares at a loss in September, Lloyds Bank charged a further £26.75 for cable, handling and delivery charges relating to the share

The reason for the charge on withdrawals is the expense to the bank of the paper-based cheque system. Both inflows and outflows into your account add up to administrative costs for the bank which render your account less lucrative-particularly in view of the higher interest rate offered—than it might otherwise be.

National Westminster has avoided the problem by making its "Special Reserve" account high interest, with no cheque facilities. "The most exciting investment of 1987."

This is your chance to take part in a remarkable investment opportunity managed by the people who have produced 356% growth over the past 10 years in the Sun Life Managed Fund unit price.

It's a Unit Linked Insurance Bond which could well turn out to be the most exciting investment this year.

A Unique Limited Edition Bond

The Sun Life Limited Edition Anniversary Bond is a true limited edition bond linked to a brand new Anniversary Fund, Applications will only be accepted up to 1st June. After that the Fund will be closed to new applications. This will ensure a relatively small fund which most investment managers agree can produce bigger growth. This is because it can be actively managed, capable of being switched quickly and efficiently into potentially profitable markets.

For instance in 1982 Australian Mining Shares rocketed over 100% in just 12 months.

In 1986 some shares on the Japanese stockmarket doubled within 6 months in Sterling terms.

And British equities were unstoppable in early 1986.

Every Chancellor's dream? You can achieve this if you have a minimum of £3,000 to invest under the BUSINESS EXPANSION SCHEME in the current tax year. The Octagon Spring 1987 BES Fund (which has been approved by the Inland Revenue) opens for subscriptions on 23rd February and closes on 20th March. It is intended that the bulk of the momes will be invested by 5th April 1987.

Unlike a direct BES investment the Fund provides a spread of risk as it will be invested in at least five separate companies.

Three features of the Octagon Spring 1987 BES Fund are: ■ It specialises in an industry sector (the 'information industries') in which the Fund's managers (Octagon Investment Management Limited) have considerable experience.

Investment in unquoted companies carries higher risks as well as the existence of these risks is and

■ It will invest in small enterprises, with perceived growth potential, at an early stage of their development.

The investee companies will gain, through monthly meetings of the 'Octagon Club', from the experience of the other 26 companies already in the Octagon portfolio.

The question for employees is which route to take. Do they go straight to making their own arrangements through a personal pension? Or do they first try to persuade their employer to set up a company pension?

Much has already been written on the new-style glamorous personal pensions that start in April next year, and even more will be heard as that date approaches. But far less has been said about the more mundane aspects of the Act relating to company pensions. Yet, the Act itself, together with changes in tax approval by the Inland Revenue, have made it much easier to set up company pension scheme in particular, an industry-wide arrangement about which the Norman Fowler, has been so enthusiastic.

However, it also offers employees the chance to build up the savings from which to buy a pension in a much more straightforward manner than the complex arrangements being devised for personal pensions. In particular, an employer can provide the bulk of the contributions towards those pensions savings in an easier manner than under a personal pension.

Admittedly, the employee has little choice in his investments - those in the Save and Prosper scheme are confined to the managed pension fund. In practice, though, most employees taking out personal pensions are very unlikely to use the investment choice and will stick to managed funds.

One major marketing feature in personal pensions is certain to be the use of the contract to secure a pension mortgage for the employee. So, the Save & Prosper scheme has a pension mortgage facility with two

THOSE OF us who spend the whole of our working lives in Britain expect our pensions to be fully taxed after retirement. After all, the funds which pay them are entirely exempt from taxation and the contributions of both employer and employee attract full relief.

But If you retire to the UK after a lifetime overseas, you will have enjoyed no such subsidy from the British Treasury and might reasonably expect that your pension will be treated rather more favour-

Responsibility for the payment of many former colonial pensions has now been taken over by the British Government as a result of which the right to the one-tenth exemption has been lost. panies are offering a special service to holders of pre-revolutionary Russian bond certificates who want to claim compensation from the Russian Fund set up recently by the Foreign Office.

George Beale, of West Somerset Manufacturers, based in Minehead, said that a printing technique called photo-etching can be used to make an exact cop of each certificate. The copy is etched on an aluminium plate which can then be framed.

The idea is that bond-holders can keep the copy as a momento and then send the original to Price Waterhouse, the accountancy firm, to claim money from the fund. Price Waterhouse won a contract from the Government to handle the claims.

Beale said the process would cost about £30 per certi-ficate, plus about £20 for a frame, depending on the size. Beale's company has pooled its resources with two other local photo-etching operations. They can be confacted via Fasteck Products, Crew-kerne, Somerset on 04506 3707.

Eric Short reports on the incomprehensible rule book just issued by the Securities and Investments Board

THE SECURITIES and Investments Board (SIB), the body intended to operate the financial services legislation, has at last produced its rule book on how investment business will be conducted in accordance with the 1986 Financial Services Act

Though it affects all investors —the purpose of the legislation is to protect the individual when he or she invests hard earned money — it is very doubtful whether anyone will be prepared to wade through the book, which weighs more than 4 lbs.

It is written in legal language because it has the status of a statutory instrument, so it is virtually incomprehensible. Secondly, it runs to literally hundreds of rules spread over

HOW TO FIND ATAX HAVEN WITHOUT LEAVING THE COUNTRY

Any plan that helps you avoid paying tax must come as some relief, especially if it gives you good investment as well.

That's exactly what the FS Tax Shelter does.

It brings together the UK equity investment skills of FS Investment Managers and the Chancellor's new Personal Equity Plan regulations.

For a single annual maximum investment of £2,400 per person, any income and gains from this will be totally tax free. FS will invest most of your FS Tax Shelter in a range of UK equities, with 25% of the plan invested in the FS Balanced Growth Fund (the UK's top performing unit trust over the two years to November 1986).

A New Opportunity

If you are searching for an adventurous investment opportunity, offering the chance of superior long-term growth, have you discovered our new Frontier Markets Trust?

This Fund is not investing in yesterday's successes but in the markets and economies that have the potential to be tomorrow's winners. We call these "Frontier Markets". Their appeal is growth potential. Last year, the Philippines and Mexico were the fastest growing markets in the world whilst the Spanish stockmarket was Europe's top performer. This demonstrates the exciting opportunities offered by Frontier Markets.

Tomorrow's Winning Markets

Gartmore Frontier Markets Trust, the first of its kind to be launched in the UK, is making a two-pronged push into this untapped territory.

A major portion of the portfolio will be invested directly in a spread of developing markets, many of which are to be found in the Far East and Asia, including Taiwan, Korea, Thailand, the Philippines and Malaysia.

Some Frontier Markets are closer to home - Spain and Turkey - while some Latin American countries also contain interesting investment prospects. The balance of the Fand will be invested in companies, listed on established stockmarkets, which derive a significant proportion of their profits from Frontier Market economies.

Gartmore's International Expertise

FINANCE & THE FAMILY

Selling a second home inherited a property in the Lake District which we have been using as a second home. As our years advanced, we have found it more and more difficult to look after it and realise that in a few years' time we will reluctantly have to

Our problem is Capital Gains! The house was valued at £29,000 at probate about 10 years ago, and now should be worth about £70.000. Our permanent home is the one we elected for our domicile and we do not intend to sell this, We wonder it it is advisable to change our elected domicile to our Lake District house! If we do this, how long would we have to vait until we could sell it without having to pay Capital Gains?

It is a pity that you have missed our published replies to broadly similar questions, over the years. At least you would have known that a free pamphlet, entitled Owner-Occupied Houses is obtainable from tax inspectors' offices: ask for pamphlet CGT4. We have criticised this pamphlet because it oversimplifies the intricate rules, for example but it is quite useful as a starting point.

It certainly looks as though you and your wife should give notice to your tax inspector that her Lake District house is to be treated as your main resi-dence, with effect from two years before the date of the notice. When the Lake District house is eventually put up for sale, you should jointly give a further notice (on the day of the sale contract) that your present house is to be treated as your main residence with effect from two years before the date of that notice: the solicitor who acts for you in the sale will be able to guide you through the CGT maze. The estate agent who acts for you will be able to give you an estimate of the market value of the house at March 31 1982, for the purpose of indexation relief, and to regotiate that value with the District Valuer, if need be. The rost of ascertaining the March 31 1992 value will be deductible in calculating the gain for CGT purposes (unless by chance that value protes to be less than the probate value).

Suppose, for illustration, that (a) the previous owner died on December 31 1976, (b) the market value at March 31 1982 was £50,000, (c) the cost of ascertaining that value is £100. (b) you give joint notice on January 31 that the house be treated as rate tax. I understand that your main residence since such tax is ordinarily not

January 31 1985. (e) the house is sold by contract dated July 31 1989 for £70,000 net after expenses. (f) on that day you give ignit potter that your area. Oddly enough, the rate of tax give joint notice that your present house be treated as your 1987, and (g) the RPI for July 1989 is £430. The chargeable gain would then be £14,331:

2.953/4,595ths of (£70,000-£29.000—£100—37.2 per cent of £50,000) =£14.331.

Equity in a flat

My son, aged 23, who has been living and working in London for about two years, intends to huy a flat for about £45,000 on a building society mortgage. He has no capital to use as a deposit but I am in a position to beip him in this.

If I was to provide say 15 per cent of the purchase price, would it he possible for me to be made the legal owner of 15 per cent of the value of the flat, and would such an arrangement make me eligible for possible capital gain to compensate me for providing capital free of interest.

It would not be possible to make you legal owner of 15 per ceut of a flat or house, but you can be given an entitlement which the law will recognise by using the device of a trust for sale. This would require your son and another person (who could be you) to be made joint owners in law with a declaration of trust under which the beneficiaries would be your son (85 per cent) and you (15 per cent). Alternatively you can lend the money on a second mortgage, but you would need to charge interest (which need not be paid until sale) instead of having a stake in the capital appreciation

Arbitrary rules

Can the tax deducted from a straightforward deed of covenant be reclaimed by the trustee of the grandchild (ie me) in a situation whereby the grandparent has paid no tax during the year on her earned income but has paid more than sufficient tax on building society interest received net le, the non reclaimable composite paid to the Inland Revenue by the building society in respect main residence since July 31 of the grandmother's interest 1987, and (g) the RPI for July does not enter into the question. There should be no problem provided that the gross amount payable under the deed in each year does not exceed the net amount in that year.

This rule is to be found in section 343 (3) (d) of the Income and Corporation Tailers Act 1970, as amended: "the amounts so paid or credited (and no more) shall, in applying section 52 and section 53 of this Act to other navments of this Act to other payments. be treated as profits or gains which have been brought into charge to income tax." There is a similar rule for bank interest subject to composite rate tax, in paragraph 4 (1) (c) of schedule 8 to the Finance Act 1984. The gap between the composite rate and the basic rate is likely to continue to diminish particularly after 1988-89 (because of section 26 (4) of the Finance Act 1984), so it is to be hoped that these arbitrary rules will be put onto a rational basis within the next year or

Strength of a promise

I recently married a farmer's daughter. My wife's father lives in a detached house on the farm. There is also the original farmhouse which is derelict and an adjoining cottage which my wife's brother lives in. My wife wants to live at the farm and her father has said if we refurbish the original farmhouse we can live in it. for the rest of our lives rent free. He is old and rather stubborn and says his word is good enough.
What would our legal rights wife's brother wished to charge us rent or sail the property, after us investing in the property's refurbishment and living in it for several years rent free?

You would have a right, supported by the equitable doctrine of estoppel, to continue to occupy the property rent free during your father-in-law's life. It may however prove difficult to establish the same right against your brother-in-law unless you can show that he has notice of the arrangement. It would be wise to write both to your father-in-law and to your grateful for your comment.

When tax is not payable

I refer to the question on January 3 headed "A £40,000 question." I believe the answer given is incorrect in that it relates to the rules that were applicable under the Capital Transfer Tax regime and not the current Inheritance Tax

The implication given in your answer is that the donor will pay tax if the £40,000 worth of gifts takes him over nil rate band whereas the true situado: is that the gifts will be classed as PETS (potentially exempt transfers) and no tax will be payable at all provided the donor survives seven years from date of transfer. The level of previous transfers and the proposed transfers only come into account in the unfortunate event of the donor not surviving the seven year period.

We agree that the gift in question would have classified as a potentially exempt transfer—a suphemistic way of describing a potentially taxable transfer. We assumed that the enquiry was directed to whether the transfer could be seen as securing exemption, and we are

There are people who specialise exclusively and happily in cats, dogs, lions, cows or sheep in clay. Sotheby's next sale of British pottery and porcelain (on February 24) includes a good cross-section of ceramic zoology, ranging from fish and swans on 18th-century delituare to a pug, a monkey seat and a near life-size heron guarding an umbrella stand.

Usually, the liveliest animals are found in pottery rather than porcelain. The makers of the more expensive water tended to take their inspiration from pretty Oriental or European models. British ceramics remains a field where the modestly prosperous can hope to build up a fine collection. Certain sectors, such as Doulton, or Wedgwood (with its American popularity), or Wemyss, much favoured by theatricals, have their own fanatical followings. Some types, such as Liverpool, seem to be in fashion, while others, such as painted Derby of the 1820s (indeed all porcolain up to around 1860), is out of favour. There are many bargains to be snapped up in what is an under-priced and under-appreciated market. The problem is supply. Unless forced by financial pressure to sell up, owners of good collections are reluctant to dispose of their treasuresthey have become irreplace-

James Tucker explains why first editions are worth so much more when jackets are intact

EVERYONE knows that a valuable first edition can be hugely more valuable if it has a dustwrapper. With a tear in my eye and an ache in my heart I've just witnessed one of the most startling illustrations of this basic law of book collecting. In an extremely modest way

I am interested in what is known in the trade as Modern Firsts original editions of novels published this century. By modest I mean that once in a long while, and when my wife is not watching. I might spend a couple of hundred pounds on In an untypically big-deal dealers and the latest to drop on to my door mat came from London dealer Rick Gekoski, who previously ran his business as a sideline from university lecturing, then took the redundough and went full time. His catalogues are always a delight and an agony: they contain wonderful things at prices I can't contemplate. Catalogue 8 is an example. It lists one of the rarest items of all 20thcentury Firsts, and it's in a dustwrapper; "slightly torn," says the catalogue description, but what can you expect after nearly 50 years?

The book is Anthony Powell's What's Become of Waring, the final of his five pre-war novels, and his last fictional work before the marvellous, 12 part A Dance To The Music Of Time started to appear in 1951.

Waring, as we experts call it, is an amusing, unpretentious tale about the search for an came out from Cassell in March 1939. The year is crucial, War was only six months away.

painfully thin, particularly as some book buyers in those days regarded wrappers as rather bad form-because of their supposed gaudiness, or because they seemed to indicate a bourgeois fussiness about protecting one's possessions-and threw them out as a routine.

For these reasons, the hunt for Waring in a jacket has always been intense among colis an amusing, unpretentious lectors, at least as obsessive as tale about the search for an the hunt for the mystery elusive author/plagiarist, and it author in the novel. Even that paled a bit as I gazed at the catalogue. Once or twice - actually, only once - I thought about hocking half the household goods and getting on the phone to Gekoski to say I'd have the Waring. Or perhaps I'd do it by letter, in the hope it was sold by the time my hid arrived. Eventually, I did crack and rang him, just to inquire what had happened. Yes, it was gone: sold more or less instantly to — need it be said? — an American institution. I didn't know whether to laugh or cry.

Gekoski kindly told me a bit about the jacket, It was mainly brown and not too attractive, he said. I can't say that diminished my sense of loss very much, though.

He thought my jacketless copy would now fetch about £250, so the wrapper put the value up by only a factor of a little over seven. That was remarkable but not unique. If it was any consolation—which I'm afraid it wasn't—he knew more marked differences. For instance, Graham Greene's Brighton Rock is obtainable without a Jacket for £100 to £150, whereas with one it will cost somewhere between £2,000 and £3,000.

Such mega-figures frightening and I don't really know what the answer for a small-time collector is. In fact, the best and cheapest solution I've come up with so far is to get myself organised and start touring furniture shops more vigilantly and ardently than ever before.

In the tangle of small streets, mews, alley ways and squares around the market, traffic. Inside, new stalls are Batholomew's Hospital staff. The planners, developers, meat trading hall at ground hospital trustees and the eagle-level beneath two new floors of eyed local action group, the eyed local action group, the Smithfield Trust, will ponder The refrigerated meat lorries that question for a time.

Up alongside this Wimpey site, facing the Barbican across Aldersgate Street, another office giant—a 245,000 sq ft block with 670 car parking spaces and a mere 2,400 sq ft of residential space—is planned to replace the NCP's multi-storey car park. On the west of the Smithfield area those redundant General Market and dant General Market and Annexe meat market buildings look irresistibly tempting as neighbours for the offices likely to rise from the site of the Holborn Viaduct Station when it closes and its rail lines are run underground to a new station at the foot of Ludgate Hill.

Mega-schemes around the fringes of Smithfield will, however, leave the heart of this bishers and infillers.

Until now there have been few opportunities to live in the area. Local agents Jarvis Keller (01-215 9226) report similar problems to Covent Garden—so few flats and houses come onto the market that only fans of the area actually know that there is anything to look for so close to the city outside the Barbican

A two-bedroomed penthouse over refurbished offices in Britton Street, EC1, is sticking on Jarvis Keller's books at £140,000 having been first marketed at £150,000. Yet over the road Janet Street-Porter is reported to be having her own flat and roof terrace built over an office floor in a distinctive new building at number 44 Britton Street. And the few flats and houses that come up for sale just to the north of Smithfield, in and around Clerkenwell Green, get snapped up fast.

David Goldstone of Regalian Properties is the man most likely to make a distinctive impact on Smithfield housing this year, since it is reliably understood that Regalian has just added to its tender-winning record by acquiring the 126-flat block at 6/9 Charterhouse Square, ECL.

Superficially, the Justy is a Ford Fiesta-sized supermini, with a transverse engine, frontwheel drive and five-speed gearbox. But built into the gear lever knob is a red push-button. Thumb it, and the Justy becomes an all-wheel drive car that tackles the kind of muck and mire for which many people would think a Land Rover or similar 4x4 essential.

It is a remarkable little machine and at present there is nothing else quite like it on the British market. There is, of course, the Fiat Panda 4x4, but that is more of a utility than a nicely-trimmed four-seat (five at a pinch) family hatchback with a choice of two or four passenger doors. And it costs only £5,999 or £6,143. respectively, with rear window wash / wipe, rev. counter, interior tailgate release, three waveband radio/tape player and interior adjustable door mirrors included.

On the road, it is an energetic little mover. The 1.2-litte engine has only three cylinders, but apart from its odd beat at very low speeds it hardly shows. As the revolutions rise, it spins and sounds like a four-cylinder engine and the faster the Justy goes, the smoother the engine

TWO identical Volvo saloons cornering at the same speed on a frozen lake in Sweden. One goes round as the driver intended; the other slides its tall despite a lot of countersteering and will end up in a snow bank. The secret is that one of the cars has electronic traction control (ETC) which is rather like anti-lock brakes (ABS) in mirror image.

ABS prevents wheels from locking during braking on a slippery surface; ETC prevents wheelspin when the tyre is being asked to transmit more torque (turning force) than it can handle. It senses when a drive wheel is losing grip and automatically reduces engine output it matches adhesion. Driving on ice and snow is made much easier and safer if wheelspin is eliminated because a spinning wheel loses lateral grip as well as driving force. Another benefit of ETC is giving a warning of aqua-planing in very heavy rain.

Front wheels stop turning when the tyres aquaplane. ETC's electronics detect the difference between front and rear wheel rotation speeds and flash a warning. Although ETC's main value ls during severe winter weather, it would also help when trying to get a car out of a soggy parking place at a race meeting. It has just become available on the Volvo 740 Turbo saloon and estate in Britain and costs £855.

EXPERT ADVICE ON THE STOCKMARKET FREE:

Maximising profits from the stockmarket requires expert advice. That's what you get from IC Stockmarket Letter.

IC Stockmarket Letter is a weekly tip sheet published by Financial Times Business Information. We could tell you how good we are and illustrate the point by highlighting the success of a few top performers - and pretend they were typical. Or we could discuss the performance of an outstanding stockmarket winner - and imply that we tipped it (though we didn't). We could go to quite amazing lengths to deceive you and con you

But we on the IC Stockmarket Letter prefer the honest approach.

How our selections have performed.

OUR REPUTATION

We don't claim to be perfect. We all make mistakes and for that reason we believe that the only accurate way of judging a tip sheet is by looking at how all of its recommendations perform over a fairly long and recent period. Recent form must rate highly. Any period has to be arbitrary, but the table below records all new recommendations made in the period from April to September 1986 (losses included). ine Wilding, secretary of the Joint Council of Language Associations. "But with that proviso, prospects seem de-finitely brighter than any of us can remember. The attitude across the whole of society has improved most encouragingly since the 1970s.

"For instance, only in 1981 I asked a big city's chamber of commerce to lend its name—not any money, just its morai sup-port—to a seminar on language learning. It turned me down saying that it saw no reason for supporting something that was of interest to its members. But now the very same chamber is actively offering language training facilities to business people throughout its region."

Mrs Wilding attributes the start of the encouraging trend to reports on the value of linguistic skill to businesses which have been produced and widely circulated over the past decade by bodies such as the British Overseas Trade Board. "They included various pieces of graphic evidence that companies do better by speaking their customers' and suppliers' longues figures and phrases that business people remembered and quoted to each other. That could well have been the initial stimulus.

"But probably even more important was that the people who produced the report didn't just publish and sit back. They kept going. Besides traveiling around presenting their fin-dings to trade groups, schools and colleges, they got various organisations including banks to work out and pump-prime a whole range of new initiatives.

A further factor was probably the brake on public expendi-ture on education which led the foreign language departments of some universities as well as technical colleges and polytechnics to go out and drum up business custom for their training programmes and other linguistic services.

But the reverse in their entries is attriated to a decline in the number of people studying other tongues during their formal education, in turn reflecting a decrease in the teenage population as a whole.

A particularly encouraging aspect of the sustained rise in the

That move-ment has since infiltrated the standard, more academic ele-ment of school studies. The repercussions can be seen in the unprecedentedly practical foreign-language syllabuses for the new 16-plus examination for England and Wales: the General Cartificate Certificate for Secondary Education which 15-year-olds are preparing to take when it replaces the dual system of Ordinary Levels and the Certificate of Secondary Education

The Newcastle Polytechnic studies expose for all to see the fallacy of the claim that, as English is now used far more than any other language for international trading, the British can do all the business they need in their own native tongue. When the researchers analysed specific transactions between British French-speaking companies, they found that about 40 French and a further 13 per cent in a mixture of French and

A third is the decision by hodies such as the Institute of Linguists, the Royal Society of Arts and the London Chamber of Commerce and Industry which award qualifications in language skills, to offer a wider range of routes to a certificate which people can use in advan cing their career. Besides taking conventional exams, children and adults can now take graded tests on the lines of those measuring proficiency in laying a musical instrument Staff who use languages in their work can also have their compe tence officially registered.

Why English is good, but not good enough

Michael Dixon reports on the world's most important languages

WHAT IS the most important language in the world? The short answer, of course, is the one spoken by the person you need to communicate with at of being the most important is evidently English, as the accom-panying table shows. It is compiled from estimates published — together with a warning that language statistics are "notoriously difficult and unreliable" — in the latest Language Month-

The first column of figures gives the broad total of people speaking English, Chinese and so on, whether as their home country's tongue or as a supplementary one. The second gives the number of countries or territories where the language is "official" in the sense of being used, perhaps along with others, in governmental docu-ments and the like.

PORTUGUESI JAPANESE

What most distinguishes English from the rest is that of its approximately 1.450m users, only about 325m speak it as their home-country language. They are outnumbered nearly By that criterion the tongue 31/2 to one by its "interwith the best statistical chance national" users. By contrast, of the estimated 1,100m speakers of Chinese, only around 50m are international users. The only other tongue whose home speakers are apparently outnumbered by their inter-national counterparts is French, with about 80m users in would not be internationally read and the books would not profitable. Even a few decades ago, such a situation would have been unthinkable.

The growth of English as world language is still accelerating. Official attempts in some parts of the world to reduce the use of English are likely to be thwarted by the sheer momentum of technological progress whose language English has become."

But as more and more British business people are fortunately realising, most of the 1.450m people who can speak English would probably much prefer to use their native tongues. There would anyway still be about 3,250m people around the globe who do not speak it at all.

Moreover, even if a UK exporter finds that the more senior staff of an overseas customer company are happy to deal in English, those upper-rauking employees' approval will not guarantee that their company as a whole will find the UK goods or services acceptable.

Many a promising export pros-pect has failed because of resistance to a new product on the customer company's shop- or office-floor. And in the words of an anonymous member of one of an anonymous member of one of ICL's export-service teams: "On the shop-floor very few people speak English. By being able to communicate (in the workers' own tongue) one can gain their confidence, which all helps to get the product accepted."

in the various languages contact they had lost potential business because their French-usand out of balance with exporting needs, but also growing still would not be internationally read and the books would not said shape of the language sell in sufficient numbers to be teaching effort of this country's schools is provided by the 16plus examinations. In the Ordinary-level exam of summer 1985-the latest year for which statistics are available—there were 519.684 entries in English language. That figure compares with 147.657 in French. 42,616 in German, 11,749 in Spanish, 2,389 in Italian, 1.375 in Russian, All other "foreign" tongues, includ-ing Welsh, attracted a combined total of 7,142.

Hence for every 100 entries in English language there were only 41 in any modern foreign tongue. And among the minority studying other languages, for ev-ery 100 entries in French there were but 29 in German, eight in Spanish, two in Italian, one in Russian and five in the rest put

The mismatch between that pattern of teaching linguistic skills and the pattern in which those skills are used by companies is indicated by language surveys made during recent years by Newcastle upon Tyne Polytechnic and other colleges. For every 100 using French there were also 100 using German. 60 Spanish. 55 Arabic, 35 Italian and 20 Japanese.

What is also worrying is the surveys' finding that for numberous companies the linguistic skills of staff who had studied a foreign tongue during their for-mal education fell short of the get the product accepted."
So it is clearly important to Britain's export hopes that the country has stocks of people that about two-thirds of the comable to communicate in the ton-gues of all its major overseas guages had staff who spoke markets. The fact, however, is some French. But half of those that the national stocks of skills same companies still believed.

time far more efficiently."

The fact that the potential for enlivening language teaching is now greater than ever before is also pointed out by Professor Nigel Reeves of Surrey University. "The software for computer-assisted learning is improving fast, and there looks to be a lot of promise in interactive videos.

"For business people, for example, a video package can face them with the sorts of authentic situations that they believe the other person is following their conversation, for instance, they often slip into using in jokes, obscure Idioms and so on that are meaningless to the foreigner.

"Britains who are going abroad to do business would do well to make a video of their proposed presentation in English, and go over it with a national of the country concerned before they set out. That might well make the difference between landing a contract and killing time far more efficiently."

The virtue of patience That, says Robin Lane Fox,

IF YOU plan to control or redesign your garden, seize the opportunity of the next six weeks. The ground is still wet, but is rapidly becoming workable as the frost draws it together. Most gardeners wake up too late; they revive with the warm weather in April when the chance for change has already slipped past. By then, it is a struggle to keep up with the changes of the plants them-

Big battles are won or lost before true spring begins. Every year, I try to have my changes in place by late March. I fail, of course, which is why we keep on trying, but the strategy is not at

Garden design, an acknowledged expert once told me, is like seduction: the more you do it, the less it worries you. Perhaps you can judge both halves of this opinion, but the half which I can judge strikes me as mistaken. In the garden, changes become no less wor-tying with experience, because you have a greater awareness of what can go wrong. You do, however, gain confidence in certain ways of looking atoproblems, and perhaps I can explain some of them. Advice on garden design tends to be either rather grand and general (Rus-sell Page or Sylvia Crowe) or too specific to small gardens and prone to endless cataloguing. Personally, I have learned more from grandiose authors, whose advice can be scaled down, than from catalogues and small de-signers who cannot be scaled up. If the detail of a small garden-plan repels you, you cannot take away any further ideas

As the season begins, I would like to recommend two virtues: boldness and patience. Often, a garden's problems begin with a feature which is too prominent or in the wrong place. The obvious answer is to take it out but that answer does not always apply.

The eyesore might belong to a neighbour: the local council could be preserving it; quite often, it began life as its owner's first effort at design. The right answer is not just to screen it. but to flank it with something power stations which the Electricity Board droos on the Electricity Board drops on the edges of "private" village properties. All these problems stand at angles, in odd materials, but they can be blunted by taking their angle as inevitable and developing it boidly with sur-rounding planting.

The awkward angle of a house can be blurred by a big flying yew hedging, running gradually magnolia, yew or a developing back to join the straight lines of tulip tree.

face head-on.

As a result, most gardeners want to know which plants will flourish under trees or hi-shade. They would do better to correct their design and rid it of agor-ophobia. Do try to run beds away from the main line of view so that you look down them, not straight at them. This sightline conceals seasonal gaps and allows you to appreciate con-trasting shapes and heights: if possible, flower beds should not stare back at you like a theatre audience.

It is easier to plant in thin drifts than in square blocks or round groupings, not least be-cause the changing seasons are then less noticeable. But you must be bold and not make the bed too narrow so that you can contrive several drifts across its depth.

Finally, a plea for patience.

Do not be scared off by words like "slow growing." We are all planting too much which will rapidly look like disposable junk Not just the quick-growing conifers but over-rampant climbers and rapid shrubs like coarse buddleias and too much forsythia. "Slow" plants do grow, and after 10 years you will bless the choice of a proper

Fertile ground for error

WHAT GETS fertilisers a had name is their misuse. The quantitles, except as water required by plants from the soil are very small yet even tiny deficiencies can produce dire effects. Let a cauliflower plant go short of molybdenum and in no time at all its leaves will be reduced to a skeleton of veins as if pigeons had been stripping them. Allow a sunflower plant to run out of boron and each growing tip will shrivel up as if a lighted match had been applied to it Fortunately there are rarely any shortages in the soil of molybdenum or boron or, for that matter, of quite a number of other essential chemicals such us copper, zinc and sulpher, and I have been able to garden throughout my lifetime in various places and on very different soils without needing to use any of these.

What I have come across from time to time are shortages of magnesium, which produced very unslightly purplish brown patches between the veins of leaves, particularly of fruit trees and, more frequently, yellowing of leaves caused by shortages of manganese, iron or both. Rhododendrons, azaleas and some heathers are specially likely to show these symptoms since they are not very efficient at extracting from and man-ganese from the soil. It is easy to add salts of iron or manganese but if the soil contains free lime it is likely that in a few days the chemicals will have changed into insolube compounds that are no longer available to plants. It is a difficulty which chemists have overcome by produc-ing special compounds of these two chemicals, known as chelated or sequestrated, which re-sist the action of the lime in the soil and enable plants to go on getting the minute quantities of iron or manganese they need for many months. As a rule one only

Manufacturers prepare them in in spring and early summer, when plants are growing at their fastest, and to apply the fertilis-er in quantities that the plants So it is not with any of these chemicals that gardeners are liable to go very wrong, nor is it stories about excess boron,

One of the clearest ways to observe the effect of nitrates is to buy a lawn fertiliser and spread it evenly over the grass some time between mid-April and mid-May using it at precisely the rate recommended on the bag. Within days you will see washed out of the soil and into greener and is growing faster; the ditches from which to flow after about a month these on into streams and rivers. Gardeners do not contribute the seventh or eighth week may much to this pollution since well have ceased altogether. All the additional nitrate has been the rivers.

If it is still no more than midnators, but gardeners read summer you could give a second about it and feel guilty.

In fact farmers are not doing peformance but it would be unthemselves any favours by using wise to do this after mid-August too much nitrate. It is costly to because from that date onwards buy and what goes into the it s desirable that the growth of ditches is simply money washed grass should slow down and the out of their pockets. There is also probability as the plants can use fairly that the late applications of any are being delivered.

readily soluble fertiliser will not be used up and some will remain as residues sure to be washed away by autumn and winter rain:

It is possible to buy fertilisers specially prepared to reduce their rate of solubility. Slow release. they may be labelled and for some purposes they can be very useful but the tradinium sulphate, superphosphate and polassium sulphate have the merit of being relatively cheap and their use well under-stood. I have described a three part mixture for that is what most general purpose garden fertilisers are.

They contain nitrates, phosphates and potash since these are the chemicals most likely to be in short supply and also the three that have a most marked balancing effect on each other. The simplest way of expressing what they do is to say that nitrates promote growth of leaf and stem, phosphates growth of roots, and potash truitfulness and ripening, but it is really more complex than that Each tends to influence the others and together they make the ideal combination unless there are other, less, common deficiencies to be rectified.

Remember also that in summer there may be little rain to dissolve the chemical, in which case it will not be available to plants. Alternatively, there may be a thunderstorm and a deluga that will dissolve it all in a few hours and wash much of it away. It is in making miscalculations such as these that feeding with bighly soluble chemicals can go wrong. With animal manures and garden compost it can take weeks for the chemicals to be formed and dissolved. That is both a safety line and a weakness since one has no certainty either as to the cnaracter or the quantity of the chemicals that

CHESS

THIS evening at 6.25, Channel 4 begins weekly televised coverage of the six-game speed chess match between Nigel Short, the British No. 1, and Gary Kas-parov, Russia's world cham-pion. Following Short's victory over Kasparov in Brussels and his emergence as the main Western hope for the world title, the series is keenly awa-ited and viewers are guaranteed some fascinating and dramatic play.
The programmes are aimed at a wide audience rather than just committed chess enthusiasts, and contain some novel features. Tony Bastable interviews both players at the start or finish of every game, there is a running move-by-move mentary, and the grandmasters wear black and white dinner jackets to match their Short's growing status has sparked a race among his contemporaries, who played against him a decade ago in junior tournaments, to become Britain's next grandmaster. The GM title is a difficult hurdle even for the strongest players."

International Chess Federation (FIDE) rules require a would-be GM to play 23 games — which normally are spread over three tournaments — at rating performance of 2600, equivalent to world top twenty standard. At least one tournament has to be an all-play-all, a type of event runners-up in strong events in Eastern Europe, could soon join them. Master-minding the operation is David Anderton, England team captain and the BCF's international director, who sifts through requests for players and arranges that opportunities go to those with best chances of norms.

There is a fruitful working agreement with the USSR, where the young British are respected since Short's surprise 1933 victory in Kasparov's home city of Baku. Government funds, rarely mentioned in a chess context, play an essential part via DES grants of two-thirds travel costs for BCF-nominated competitors.

Such fantasies can be indulged at the Museum of Eton Life, which opened in 1985 in a brick-vaulted College brewery storeroom. Its brochure states that the Museum "endeavours to show how the School has fashioned the Founder's ideals of 'religion and sound learning ' over five centuries." There is more fun in it than that.

Here is a magnificent silvergilt-mounted coconut loving cup, given to the College in 1492, Nicholas Udall, headmaster, must have drunk from it. His reign ended in 1543 when, having charged two pupils with stealing College plate, they countered by securing his conviction for unnaturally assaulting them. The offence was capital—but he escaped with brief imprisonment, followed by demotion to the headmastership of West. the headmastership of Westminster School.

Less lucky was scholar John Greenhall, who could have used this 16th century lead inkwell. Leaving Eton in 1576, he became a highwayman, was caught, "hanged and dissected."

John Edwards (left), with his new daughter, aged one, and his oldest son, Mark, aged 30

"YOU MUST be mad" was first time round about how much the politest reaction when I announced about 18 months ago that I was to become a father again after a gap of nearly 30

Most comments from male acquaintances cast doubts over my virility ("Didn't know you had it in you." or "How did the milkman take the news?" and other such coarse pleasantries). But there was also an under-current of admiration and envy. Female reaction was much more sympathetic, if slightly dis-

So on my new daughter's first birthday, how does it feel to be a father of over 50 and what are the main changes over the past 30 years?

The short answer is: nannies and nappies. First of all, nannies. My first three children were born when I was young, earning relatively little and certainly unable to afford a nanny. Indeed, we were living in a small flat at the top of my mother's house at the time and, with hindsight, I am amazed at how we coped.

A nanny (preferably living in) I now know makes all the difference and if you are my age I'd say it is essential.

Not that they don't sometimes cause problems. Almost service. found by advertising in The shire, who found the strain of looking after a baby too much and kept bursting into tears at her inadequacy. We helped her find a more suitable job as a caterer for a big store. The next incumbent was a character." She interviewed us and deigned to take the job. She was large (taking size 28, yes 28, dresses) and had an hysterical laugh chillingly reminiscent of the first Mrs Rochester. I disapproved from the start, fearing massive food bills and extra female bullying in the house. But she survived until she made the mistake of accusing my wife of "interfering" with the baby.

All is well now. Using an agency (at horrendous cost) we found just the right girl and everyone is happy. Using the In spite of great pressure I right mixture of firm discipline, took advantage of my advanced and loving care, the sleepness nights are now down to a everything costs. Anything we need, we buy.

But the biggest, most welcome, change is disposable nappies. After 30 years I can still recall the hassle involved in washing, drying and dealing with the endless conveyor belt of napples. Indeed, I still have the scars of where I salflessly jabbed myself with the safety pin while trying to fold and fit nappies on a struggling child. Now I even volunteer to change the nappy on occasions (when I need to earn brownie points); it is so simple and the dustman deals with the disposal problem.

I haven't dared to work out just how much extra disposable nappies cost, because I don't need or want to. They are need of want to, they are simply a major advance in looking after babies. Technology may have improved but the health service hasn't. The hospital (St Thomas's) where Penelope was born seemed to be suffering hard from the spending cuts. Although she was born fairly early in the morning, at 9 am, the hospital had already run out of the day's meagre supply of suitable swaddling clothes needed to

There were discernible changes in attitude, however. In 1956 fathers tended to be treated as a nuisance; they were discouraged from attending the birth and their role confined to visiting hours at the prescribed times. The bables were subject to a strict routine of four-hourly necessary, even if they had just fallen asleeb.

Nowadays everything is much more relaxed, and fathers are actually encouraged to take an active part. For my part, being very squeamish and with no desire to see the birth or to film it to show to friends later, I think it's all gone too far.

But in a way the waiting seemed worse. Trapped in the hospital at crack of dawn, nervously awaiting news from two floors below, there was nothing to divert me except Breakfast TV-an experience I never want to repeat. Once safely home, after being able to visit the hospital at almost any time. there was another change of attitude to cope with. Back in the 1950s, pre-Esther Rantzen, most mothers breast-fed their babies in private unless they were very avant Firde or leftish. Some of my older male friends' attitudes were still stuck in the 1950s and I could embarrassing moments coming up. With the help of my brother-in-law. I evolved a simple yet effective technique for dealing with the problem. My first question to bewildered visitors was: "Are you a Guardian reader." If they replied yes, or murmured something about liking the old Grauniad, there was no problem in confronting them with a doting breast-feeding mother. But if they viewed heing accused of reading the Cuardian as some unspealtable slur, and pledged support for the Delly Telegraph, Daily Mail or Daily Express, they had to he steered elsewhere. FT and Times readers were a hit more tricky — a few supplementary questions were required.

Once the baby stage is over. I view with some trenidation the wide age gap (a teenage crisis on a war footing, as he daughter when you're nearly 70 years old must be difficult). I well remember with my first family, disapproving of the Beatles strongly on the grounds they were too noisy, and showing some anger when my son woke me up to tell me the world-shattering news that Elvis Presley (who he?) had died.

Nevertheless, there are a lot of compensations. Having young children when you can afford them is a real pleasure. I am a doting father—probably ten-doting—and I am looking forward to the golden years when children still do what they are told without question. Then there will be the pleasures of re-reading Winnie the Pooh. going to children's films and plays, having an excuse to buy toys and games.

I have probably provided the hest answer as to whether I like being a father again at over 50. Another baby is due at the end of April and I haven't been carried away yet by the men in white coats.

Mainly he leaves Economist the building trade in them, as he does the rest of the tax scene. He has a different vantage-point from many of us (on a roof, chiefly—he is an excellent roofer).

He shares just one belief with supply-side economists: "I think taxes are a hit high, actually," He has a unorthodox approach which has no need of accountants, lawyers or off-shore avoid-ance schemes. "I can't see an advantage to paying taxes." So he doesn't.

Although the Inland Revenue is beefing up its Hit Squad in order to cast light on the Black Economy. Dave would never stoop to falsifying his returns; he makes no returns at all. He explains his Alternative fiscal policy quite simply: "The only difference between paying tax and not paying tax is that if you pay up. there is less money at the end of the day.'

And another thing: "It's not just the tax itself, you have to pay an accountant and so on. It is to this happy (so far) state of affairs that he owes his competitive edge. "If you have, bute to social unrest." like me, no overheads, you can offer a price of £250 or £300 for a job instead of the £500 quoted general would price itself out of much of the market. This might seem like special pleading but it is a view supported by Off the Books—The Rise of the Underground Economy—by Philip Mattera (Pluto). Dave has not read it but he would agree with its conclusions: "It is a mistake to assume that concealed income could, to any degree, be captured and subjected to taxation. Much underground activity takes place precisely because it is free from taxation, otherwise it would cease to exist."

Off the Books takes the line that the "regular" economy does not offer sufficient work to take up all those engaged in the "informal" economy: "In other words, the underground economy has been serving as a kind of cushion against the full impact of the above-ground economy. To eliminate these jobs since most of them would evaporate if subjected to full taxation and regulation-would swell the ranks of the unemployed and pontentially contri-

Dave does not quite see himself as preserving the nation from fighting in the streets but by a legitimate company, which he is more than simply a may not even be a large firm fiddler on the roof. "I wouldn't Peter Fort has small builder who mind paying taxes if I felt they good use, if the money wasn't going to stockpile cruise mis-siles. I think that the less money these governments have. the less harm they can do."-

Unfortunately, he does occa-sionally find himself trapped into making contributions to the state's bank balance, when he carries out sub-contracting work for a company which is eccentric enough to stop a third of his cash for tax. "It breaks my heart. Still, you're then given an SC60 receipt for the tax that's been deducted and if you do this enough you've got enough certificates to make it look reasonable to the taxmen. I know people who don't pay anything at all; I feel like a good citizen."

His finances, unlike his roofs, are not watertight but he does what he can. "I do actually keep books but I never show them to anyone. I've somehow managed to keep them so that they look quite legitimate." He may one day need all the legitimacy he can get: he has begun to receive the odd letter from the Revenue.

To Philip Mattera, irregular earnings can represent "a struggle for change and a search for an alternative way of life." Dave, the underground roofer, states: "I feel good about it. They're not getting my money," fashion editor of Brides magazine and now a freelance fashion stylist and mother of one-year-old Charlotte, is in no doubt that the three most vital things the new mother needs are, a fully automatic washing machine, a washing-up machine (in my days they were still a quite extraordinary luxury which I thought only the truly idle could possibly require) and a maternity nurse.

"They seem expensive at about £100 a week," says Christine. "but they do seem to know it all. I had mine for five weeks though she told me that usually she could get her ladies organised in three weeks.

"I didn't buy too much be-fore the baby was born, partly because it seemed tempting fate and partly because I knew the maternity nurse would fill me in on what I really needed. I did buy a nice plain white Mothercare kit for sterilising bottles and she went straigt out and changed it for a Maws version. It's in hideous orange but apparently has a better floater for keeping the bottles under water.

"Could Mothercare make a better floater or could Maws make one in nice plain white? "I wouldn't dream of using

"For clothes I tend to be rather snobbish and I don't like most of what I see at Mothercare-it's full of artificial fibres. They do some quite nice Babystretches but why do they have the opening at the back instead of round the crutch? It means you have to more or less undress the baby completely to change the nappy.

"I don't like the range of sleepsuits on offer either—they all seem to be made completely of plastic, so I got my dressmaker to make some up in a Vivella/cotton mixture and they look much nicer. EVERY two years for the past decade, the International Food and Drink Exhibition has been held at Olympia in west London. It is a trade fair for manufacturers, importers, agents, distributors, wholesalers, retailers, caterers and the press an amazing hotchpotch, with exhibitors coming from all over the world.

Some international firms have massive stands all to themselves and their razzmatazz includes video films, glossy brochures, curvaceous girls and microwave ovens heating endless samples. Some do not seem to have any new products to show: I suspect they are there to keep their names in the limelight and watch their rivals.

This year, there seemed to be more tinsel and less charm than before. I was struck by the acreage devoted to frozen foods and depressed by the quality of many products that were attracting lots of attention.
Lips (although not mine) were being smacked over the brewing of some beverages due to be launched next month— packs of filter ground coffee with such added flavourings as brandy, Irish cream, orange and chocolate-mint. These products are presumably aimed at scooping up some of the lucrative cream liquer market.

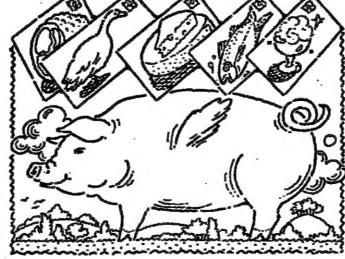

I winced, too, as I was intro-duced to what the manufacturers were pleased to call "hospitality foods." These often pre-tentious snacks at inflated prices included such unappetising numtially fish fingers reduced to Lilliputian proportions, ready to spear on dainty plastic cocktail sticks and rechristnened pieces of eight, threepenny bits or some such fanciful name.

Not all the products I saw were this disheartening. Many interesting and a few were very good indeed. I was pleasantly surprised when I tried two fruits new to me. The Chilean stand had huge black plums (already on sale at Marks and Spencer); and Carmel was introducing the feijoa, a dark green smoothskinned fruit the size and shape of a kiwifruit. It is, in fact, a type of guava said to have a flavour somewhere between that and the pineapple.

I was cheered to see frozen peeled chestnuts by Colombe (already on sale at Waitrose): chestnuts are so good and peeling them is so tedious. I was delighted, too, by the presence evidence. I saw enough smoked of Cuan, the oyster-farming salmon to feed an army. One Guinness subsidiary. I am a fan of its excellent and reasonably priced fresh oyster mail order service; and its frozen oysters au gratin (delicately dabbed with garlic butter) remain the hest frozen fish product I have tasted. They deserve far wider distribution.

Another mail order service well worth noting is Heal Farm in Devon Anne Petch is deservedly famous for her I tasted was smoked goose sausages hams, bacon and other breast by Pettitis (distributed pork mest products. Prospero's Fine Ices. The range of 11 sorbets, including mango and Grand Marnier (winner of a Quality Food Award), champagne, and blackberry with blackberry liqueur, was launched two years ago. Now, there are six luscious ice-creams including passion fruit, dark French chocolate and a concoction called peach with brandy, which seemed to me more like brandy with peach. These are the sort of sorbets and ice-creams that many good cooks will want to pass off as traditional farmhouse way included Lanark Blue, a new Scottish mould ripened cheese made from unpasteurized ewe's milk by H. J. Errington. I sampled this agreeably saltysharp cheese on its own and on a crisp featherlight curl of wholewheat biscuit. I had noticed these unusual biscuits on other stands, too, being wolfed down by exhibitors and visitors alike, and in due course learned that the manufacturer had been round distributing boxes of them to exhibitors who were offering visitors sample tastings of cheeses, pates and other bonnes bouches. An enterprising move by John Pretty, of Millers Damsels.

He launched his Wheat Wafers, as the biscuits are called, about four years ago.
Originally only available at such shops as Justin de Blank,
Harrods, and Paxton and Whitfield, they are now stocked by growing numbers of delicates sen and specialist cheese shops throughout the country. In addition to the original recipe three variations have just been launched—one with added poppy seeds, one with sesame and one with celery seeds-and there are sweet biscuits, too.

TWILIGHT OF THE ASCENDANCY by Mark Bence-Jones. Constable, £14.95, 327 pages

the Ascendancy, as the Irish landed gentry used to be known: lost the political dominance which had originally given them that name. Yet until the 1950s they remained a separate and easily identifiable social class, albeit one that had outlived its usefulness. Things are very different nowadays, thank goodness, with the best of the descendants of the Ascendancy well absorbed into the life of the country, and making significant contributions to it, especially in the arts and agriculture. There are, in agriculture. There are, inevitably, Irish Sloane Ranger types, but nobody would think of labelling them "Ascendancy," "Anglo" or "West Brit," perhaps, but never "Ascendancy," The term has at long last become history.

Mark Bence-Jones eliminates -many prejudices about this much-maligned class by filling in the background of their life between 1870 and 1967. He points out that "Anglo-Irish." often used with neutral descriptive intent by English writers, is a misleading term. However strong the English accent, even those most loyal to the Crown in the late nineteenth century would insist that they were Irish, and would take no criticism of Irish ways or politics from their English neighbours. Just under 40 per cent. of Ascendancy families

Norman stock. Others were descendants of Cromwellian settlers, Presbyterian Lowland Scots or Huguenots, After the 1829 Act of Emancipation Catholic landowners were ableto take an active part in IT IS OVER 150 years since administering the affairs of the country, and the Ascendancy to be exclusively Protestant.

In spite of the loss of their political power the Ascendancy were, for a time, able to maintain their position as a social elite. The annual round of hunting fixtures, race meetings, lawn tennis parties, cricket matches, house parties, hunt balls and the Dublin season was still going strong when the First World War broke out, in spite of the fact that many of the participants were already well on their way to penury. It was at this point too that their houses and gardens were at their loveliest. Few of those that survived "the Troubles" and the bwi times that followed. have had such care and attention lavished on them again

After Independence, the manpower and the money needed to keep up such establishments was simply no longer there. Land reforms had deprived many members of the Ascendancy of their only source of income. Whereas before the war a "Big House" and its demesne could tick over on very little cash, prices after the war made such an existence impossible.

Bence-Jones makes political and economic reasons for the decline Ascendancy very clear, and characterises were of old Gaelic or Anglo- distinct phases of its demise. He includes a wealth of anecdotes of Ascendancy eccentricity, arising either from the habits of the noble lords and ladies. or from the presence of batty butlers and plain-speaking retainers and apparently ubiquitous problems with the plumbing and the heating. The text is further enlivened by copious illustrations, many of which come from private collections. As in any account of Irish history, comedy and tragedy are never far apart here, most especially in the aftermath of the fight for Independence. About 200 "Big Houses" were burnt out between 1920 and 1923, a figure which Bence-Jones suggests we should not find too shocking, given that there were over 2,000 such establishments in the country at that time. The point he is making is that not every ruined house to be found in the Irish countryside today is a result of the Troubles, but even so. 10 per cent seems a The tragedy is brought out by the ordeals of the unfortunate few who had to watch their houses burn to the ground, with the possessions they had managed to save piled up in front of it. More typical, however, is the experience of Lady Susan Dawnay, who was absent from home during an engagement in the demesne of Whitfield Court between the Free State Troops and the Republicans, "There was a battle on the lawn this morning," the gardener reported in a letter. "There were no casualties and both greatly admired your Ladyship's antirrhinums.

Murrow was also, especially to a younger generation of reporters and foreign correspondents whom he encouraged and nurtured, an authentic folk hero, a Mr Valiant-for-Truth among the murky compromises of the commercial networks and the arm-twisting sometimes exerted by government departments in Washington DC.

With all that, he had his blemishes, impatience and an arrogant recklessness not unconnected with an inner selfdestructive urge. This, in short, is a very American story, not quite from log cabin to White House but certainly to dizzy heights of national and international fame, and Ann Sperber has told it with such loving attention to detail, such vigilant cross-checking, so many interviews with survivors, that it provides not only an absorbing account of one man's career but hrilliant evocation of an entire troubled era.

BOSWELL: THE ENGLISH EXPERIMENT 1785-1789 Edited by Irma S. Lustig and Frederick A. Potule. Heinemann £30, 332 pages

THE ENGLISH Experiment thirteenth constitutes the volume of James Boswell's private papers-bringing us to 1789—and there remains six years of his life yet to chronicle. Then there is his correspondence to gather and annotate (the two volumes edited by C. B. Tinker in 1924 yearn to be superseded): and the Life of Johnson (six volumes, edited by Hill and Powell. 1934-64) must be merged into the paper portrait somehow.

What the portrait depicts, in sum, and what upwards of 40 professors operating out of the Beinecke Rare Book and Manuscript Library, Yale, imply, is that Boswell had an ohsession—with his own sense of self: "all my English bar scheme was chiefly with a view to how it would tell." Tell, with a view to fame; tell, with a view to celebrity. He wanted to succeed at the King's Bench. having grown bored and impatient with Edinburgh. impatient with Edinburgh. Such, the vanity of human wishes, is the plot of this book. which reads as spryly as any novel.

Boredom and impatience ran deep in Boswell, as was revealed on December 27 1787. Snowed in for a few days, rest-lessness became terminal: "I fancy my mind was in a state very similar to that of those wretched mortals who kill themselves." He attempted to fice, stomping off through the drifts; full of chagrin, he returned, his absence unnoticed. Nothing angered him more than being unnoticed.

"We are all very sorry to part with you," wrote infant Veronica Boswell to her harumscarum papa, "but hope you will be happier in London." He was not. Lodging hundreds of miles from his family, Boswell was suffused with guilt. He had abandoned a consumptive wife and feudal responsibility at Auchinleck; he had abandoned a prosperous, if dull, position as advocate in Edinburgh, And, trained in Scottish law, he failed to fathom the technicalities of Westminster Hall's statutory system. It was quite another Kennedy regime, he accepted language; Boswell, an upstart an offer to become head of the alien, finally had to admit, by July 1786, that "there is no probability of my setting great practice at the English bar."

The chief achievement of the English experiment was gor-mandocratic. Called to the bar on the eve of St Valentine's Day, 1786, Boswell feasted on fish. ham, fowls, beef, apple pies, fruit. cheese, madeira, port, and as good claret as ever was Drink was big in Boswell. It rose him "into temporary felicity," but mornings after the nights before were viciously crapulous: "I tried twice to get up and was obliged to lie down again." He also had a venereal disease. Mrs Boswell spitting blood in Ayrshire. Boswell himself, to assuage his glands, was perforce an adulterer. His mistress was a Mrs Rudd. From the safe distance of York, he sent her a note informing of his ailment. Mrs Rudd's reaction is not recorded.

Syphillitic, alcoholic, a conceited failure: what had Boswell to offer which keeps 40 Yale professors locked upon his manuscripts? Whilst his very capriciousness and arrogance engage, it is the genesis of the Life of Johnson which allures. Despite being a diseased and ensoured drunk, he made a masterwork; his appreciation of his own literary skill was no his own literary skill was no delusion of grandeur. One of his indignant memories of Edinburgh was that it "pro-voked me a little that my literary superiority seemed to have no effect here."

During The English Experiment, the great biography is commenced-on Sunday July 9 1786, in fact. Boswell was haunted by Johnson. He is trawled for anecdotes. scavenged for memories, and recollections. He found Johnson's negro servant. Frank Barber, "and he promised to search for every scrap of his master's handwriting and give all to me.

Boswell now researched his yay into immortality. Why? way into immortality. Why? Because Johnson's ouizzical dignity-riddling a pedigree for words in his Dictionary or gently subverting notions of taste in his Prefaces-represented an ideal and accomplished temperament, nervous. quivering Boswell could never attain for himself.

£12.95, 279 pages NOVEMBER by Janet Hobhouse. Jonathan Cape. £9.95, 198 pages THE HOUSE ON MOON LAKE by Francesca Duranti translated by Stephen Sartarelli. Collins, £9.95, 181 pages

THREE DAY BREAK by David Hegarty, Allison & Busby, £9.95, 279 pages

REYNOLDS STONE, now Professor of English at Duke University, was boro in North Carolina: he made an immediate and deserved success with his first novel. A Long and Happy Life, and since then has written twelve more good, but in this country somewhat neglected ones. Perhaps he has paid the unfair penalty, not infrequent, of having written an outstanding first novel.

Kate Vaiden should put things right again here—as it has already done in America. It is the first-person narration of a woman going back over her life in middle age. Because of her cruel childhood and an early bereavement she has tried to make herself hard-hearted; but, through her feelings for a son she ahandoned, she discovers that hardness leads to more unhappiness than the indulgence of natural feelings.

This has the fault of many 'southern" novels: it is sometimes over-brutal and overmelodramatic—it is a little coarse in its outlines. But it is nonetheless as moving as it is deeply felt. It also has many incidental subtleties. It is not a major novel; but it is a firstrate one-and that is unusual enough.

Seasonal Tribal Feasts is the final and fifth novel in what the author has called "the Windmill Hill sequence." The publishers described this as having been received with "brilliant acclaim" (every book nowadays has been "acclaimed" whether it has been or not).

This is a commendably serious attempt at a roman fleure rather in the wayward Robert Musil than in the very English straightforward C. P. Snow style; but I cannot say that it wholly succeeds. Stuart Evans's heart is in the right place, and the whole work is carefully and intelligently planned; there is banal or, at worst, embarrassing. I think the reason for the failure is that the author is simply too ambitious. one considers that similar romans fleures or novel sequences by Jules Romains are even if great novels failures, one begins to see some of the disadavantages of overambitiousness, and, indeed, the difficulties of trying to accommodate this sort of large-scale project in just five moderately sized books.

Stuart Evans has, however, been compared to Juvenal by one reviewer (I cannot for the life of me see why) and, since J. it is a work that any reasonable person would like to praise. I put it forward as something eminently worth trying out. If is nothing if not respectable in intention.

Janet Hobbouse was born in New York but came to England at the age of 16: she read English at Oxford and has written an engaging and perceptive biography of Gertrude Stein and two well received earlier novels Newscatter novels. November is a neat and lively account of a refugee from artistic pretentiousness and the disastrous woman with whom he becomes involved. Set in New York. London and Florence, it evokes all these places with style and panache.

A thoroughly agreeable book. The House on Moon Lake did well in Italy in 1984 and won itself three prizes. The author is a translator who has written two previous novels and made rannumber of translations from French, German and English. Francesca Duranti in turn has been well served by the experi translator of this excellently judged shost story. It is about a translator called Frabrizio who finds a reference to a lost German novel and determines to track it down. It ends by overwhelming him. This is a fine exercise in sophisticated Gothic not very deeply feltbut highly elegant, and enjoyable throughout.

IN THE Posthumous Prolixity Stakes, Marilyn Monroe and - Ernest Hemingway are surely now neck and neck. While the grand old man of American literature continues to lavish works on us from beyond the grave, the cinema's great sexgoddess also continues to make surpfise returns. Photographs "never published before" keep appearing; and when they do they are usually accompanied by a monograph on Monroe by a famous writer hired to weave a text around the pictures.

The only place to go after Norman Mailer was, of course, to Gloria Steinem: from America's king of male chauvinism to the country's leading pretender to the feminist crown. Thank goodness Steinem is not anxious, as was Mailer, to prove that her name is a near-anagram of Marilyn Monroe. (It is in fact an anagram of "N. Mailer. "egoist." for collectors of choicely ironic encodings; Steinem's approach to the star is to paint her largely as victim and emotional orphan; a picture which threatens at first to be no less exploitative and ideologically conscriptive than Mailer's picture of Marilyn as a woman born to delight men. But this new book escapes the dangers of biography à thèse thanks to two things.

Firstly, Steiners homes in as much on the touching comedy-and serendipity of Marilyn's rise to fame as on any mawkish potential for pathos. I did not know until this book that the origins of the Monroe Simper, that unique trait in which the on the sand, wrapped in her the teeth and lower lip do all the smile-work, arose from a friend's telling her that the gap between her nose and mouth was un-classically narrow. Nor had I stumbled on tales of her early struggles with her screen name. "When someone. asked me for my autograph." she once said. "I had to ask,

Marilyn tousled, windblown and beautiful on cold beaches; Marilyn wonderfully appealing in seen-better-days poses around her home; Marilyn in the very last picture taken of her, sitting hunch-kneed and hands-clasped woolly, pouting with a lazy mis-chief at the camera.

But we still do not get to the heart of her. And how could we? The only quality of a star that matters - the quality that must be in the mixture when a star is made - is elusiveness. Brando, James Dean, was there in Monroe in oodles. It leaves the viewer always hungry for more; it leads to the fascination with the on-screen image and inexhaustible curiosity about the off-screen life.

True stars, like true magicians, never give their secrets away. Indeed they will carry them if necessary to the grave. As Steinem says of Monroe: When the past dies there is mourning, but when the future dies our imaginations are compelled to carry it on." The Monroe industry is still carrying on, and there is no reason to believe that this book will be the last.

Alamein, at which he commanded 30 Corps, was the high spot of his career, for he performed best under a strong army commander like Montgomery, but even here he found occasion to blame the armour for having, he said, "no stomach for the fight." Of the invasion of Sicily he wrote: I'd like to shoot the xxx who chose this plan-and send his head on a pitcher [sic] back to Mountbatten and his useless racket." His style of command when he took over VIII Army in Italy was in strong contrast to that of Montgomery. It was surely the wish to have a friend around that led to the notorious episode of his attempt to replace Slim as XIV Army Commander by Christison then commanding 15 Corps in Arakan, an old friend from Staff College days. And for all Ryder's strenuous efforts to exonerate Leese it still seems to this reviewer that Ronald Lewin's account of the affair in his biography of Slim, augmented by the evidence brought to light in the lecture he read to the Royal Society of Literature in 1981, is substantially correct. What Ryder has added to the

So it is a pleasant duty to report that an amazing breadth of coverage has nonetheless been achieved, and that the overall standard of the chapters is impressively high (much more uniform, indeed, than that of Opera on Record, which as a contributor to all three volumes I feel I can pass the remark without prejudice!).

In essence the Arts Council is trying to put together a pool of money for new musical initiatives. With its grant rising by a miserly 3.5 per cent in 1987-88, it can only find such a pool by making savings. Some of the dropped outfits, it in turns to be singled such as the Academy of Ancient for a hard time_____

The real outers in the music

The real outcry in the music world will come next week when the four leading orchestras—the LSO, the LPO, the RPO and the Philharmonia learn their subsidy for the new financial year. All will receive between £400,000-£500,000, but, attracted a storm of abuse because of the abrupt timing.

Or a bang and then a whimper? How you view this week's happenings in the world of British fisticuffs depends entirely on your point of view. But a livelier seven days would be hard to imagine.

At week's start came news that the left-wing council in the London Borough of Hackney was to consider a proposal to ban professional boxing in the venues that it licenses, including Shoreditch Town Hall-the first time that anyone has sought to outlaw the manly art of professional pugilism anywhere in Britain.

At week's close - at Wembley's Grand Hall tomorrow -Britain's Lloyd Honeyghan defends his world welterweight titles against Johnny Bumphus of America in a fight that should help cement Honeyghan's reputation as a champion of the highest merit.

Let us start with the whimper and finish with the hang, for in my book Honeyghan's encounter with deputy sheriff Bum-phus from Nashville, Tennessee -a 26-year-old who packs a wallop of a punch as well as a Smith and Wesson 38 revolver—will be immeasurably more percussive than the piffling peal of protest from Hackney's council, whose members are determined to ban professional boxing because of "overwhelm-ing evidence" of its harmful Hackney's proposed ban leap outo the anti-boxing bandwagon in a war on pugs.

The British Boxing Board of Control is distressed at the proposed ban, and is ready to take firm counter-measures.
